PREFACE

GREEK is to-day the living speech of many millions dwelling about the eastern shores of the Mediterranean, in Turkey, Asia Minor, and Egypt, as well as in Crete and in Greece proper. A knowledge of this language would therefore simplify the conditions of travel throughout a large and important part of the old world. It would also open up to the student a new literature, much of which is of a high order.

But New Greek makes other appeals to the consideration of practical men and of students. In these days of international congresses a pressing need is felt of some common medium of expression, for few men are such masters of the three languages in which discussions are usually held at these gatherings as to enable them to take an intelligent part in all the deliberations. English, French, and German have each in turn been proposed as the international language, but national jealousies would appear to offer an insuperable obstacle to the adoption of any one of them to the exclusion of the other two. The only solution of the difficulty seems to lie in the selection of some other language which could be universally accepted without wound to the national pride of any European people. Many men, from Voltaire to Blackie and others of the present day, have urged the adoption of Greek for this purpose, and of all living tongues none has stronger claims in this regard. Its adaptability to the needs of international communication is shown by the fact that it is now the language of commerce throughout the Levant, as it was, before and at the beginning of the Christian era, the common tongue of men of letters and of polite society in the civilized world. A large proportion of scientific nomenclature is Greek, and most professional men have studied the language in their youth, so that they would be spared much of the drudgery attendant upon the learning of an entirely strange tongue. The chief objections urged against Greek are the assumed difficulty of acquiring a utilizable knowledge of the language and the paucity of text-books. It is hoped that the present work may demonstrate the fallacy of the first of these objections and may in a measure remove the other for English-speaking students.

These considerations apart, however, it is perhaps chiefly as an introduction to a knowledge of the ancient form of the language that this little book will find its apology. Any foreigner purposing to study Spenser or Chaucer would, as a matter of course, begin by learning modern English, and there would seem to be no valid argument why the same logical plan should not be followed if the aim be Homer, Xenophon, or the Greek New Testament. Indeed, it is difficult to understand how the latter can be studied with profit by any one ignorant of the modern idiom, so replete is it with non-classical and even present-day phraseology.

But Greek of our time has a closer relation to the language of these works than English and the other modern tongues of Europe have to their early classics. This fact has been so incontrovertibly established by d'Eichthal, Blackie, Gennadius, and many others, that it is needless to go over the ground again. Moreover, any unprejudiced student, acquainted with classical Greek, needs but to glance through a modern Greek newspaper to become convinced of the practical identity of the two forms of speech. Modern Greek is, as Geldart has so happily phrased it, simply ancient Greek made easy. The conjugation of the ancient Greek verb is shorn of its terrors to one who is already familiar with the simpler forms of the modern verb. And in that, if we except the slightly different arrangement of words in the sentence and a vocabulary modified to meet the necessities of modern thought, lies practically the only difference between the language of Demosthenes or Herodotus and that of Coraës or Bikelas.

It is little wonder that men of practical learning have protested against the scholastic teaching of Latin and Greek as a waste of time and energy and a hinderance to sound learning. These men are surely right if the present routine is to hold, for three-quarters of the time now devoted to these studies might well be given to other branches. But it is not necessary to renounce them altogether — "the humanities," as they are so fitly called. On the contrary, these languages should be taught, but taught in such a way as to make them instruments of thought as well as of mental discipline. The young men and women in our colleges should learn them as living tongues, learn to know them and to use them as they do their mother speech.

This is not so impossible as those who are familiar only with old-school routine are wont to imagine. Latin is so learned in Catholic seminaries throughout the world, and the result is seen in the practical knowledge of the language which the clergy of that church possess. The study of languages, ancient or modern, is still too much a matter of the eye and too little one of the ear or tongue. The ability to translate, or even to appreciate the ideas expressed on the printed page without translating, does not constitute knowledge of a language, any more than familiarity with medical terminology makes a physician. True knowledge of a language comes from the mastery of the idiom by ear and tongue and eye, and does not consist in its cognition by the latter alone.

No claim is advanced for originality in the method developed in this work; an effort has been made to combine the best points of many systems, and acknowledgment is gladly made to the writings of Marcell, Gouin, Haeusser, Mogyorossy, Kroeh, and others for many of the features which it contains.

The pronunciation here presented is, of course, that of the Modern Greeks. That it differs in some respects from that of the ancients will hardly be disputed, nor can it be contended that the pronunciation of the language at the time when the Epics ascribed to Homer were first recited was identical with that in vogue in the time of Pericles or with that used by St. Paul when preaching to the Athenians. Change is the attribute of life, and a language that has lived for three thousand years and more must have undergone some change in its pronunciation as well as in its grammatical forms. But that this pronunciation is more nearly that of the ancients than is the artificial and indefensible system taught in our schools to-day—the one devised at second hand by Erasmus, who himself used the modern pronunciation—is a proposition that would seem to need no demonstration. On the score of melodiousness even, the modern pronunciation is far superior to the "Erasmian," as any one may ascertain for himself by listening to the speech of an educated Greek.

The figured pronunciation in the First Lesson and in the transliteration of the Thought Exercises is intended to represent as nearly as may be the sound of the Greek words as heard in ordinary conversation. In careful reading and speaking the consonantal modifications (p to b, s to z, etc.) occur less frequently, and even in rapid talking there are some exceptions to the rules here given. It is impossible to represent perfectly the pronunciation of one language in the symbols of another, but in the absence of a native teacher, the speech of one who follows these directions will at least be intelligible, even though it betray foreign birth.

It seems hardly necessary to apologize for the unidiomatic English of the translations. The sole object is to convey the meaning of the Greek, and the translations are therefore as nearly literal as possible.

The manner in which this book should be used by one who has not the advantage of a native teacher is fully explained in the following pages, and this explanation need not be anticipated here. The intending student is simply reminded that a faithful observance of all the directions is absolutely essential to the mastery of Modern Greek.

It is the author's pleasant duty, in closing (it is also his guarantee of orthodoxy), to acknowledge his indebtedness to Mr. Anthony Stamoulis for revision of the Thought and Conversation Exercises, and to him and to Miss Mary Vaka for assistance in the correction of the proof-sheets. A great part of the drudgery of copying the manuscript and preparing it for the press fell to the lot of the author's wife, whose accurate execution of this difficult task calls for grateful recognition. To the publishers, finally, thanks are due for their willingness to undertake a work which, from its nature, could offer only to a liberal foresight its promise of an adequate pecuniary return.

MODERN GREEK MASTERY

LESSON FIRST

ΜΑΘΗΜΑ ΠΡΩΤΟΝ

The Alphabet—Τὸ Ἀλφάβητον

The Greek alphabet is the same to-day as it was in the classical period of the language. It consists of twenty-four letters—seven vowels and seventeen consonants.

Three characters, which were found in the alphabet in pre-classical times, have been dropped therefrom, but are still employed as figures; these will be shown in the section on Cardinal Numbers in Lesson XIV. Another letter originally in the alphabet was vaf or dhighamma (so called from its shape, Ϝ). It had the value of vita.

The signs in the right-hand column in the following table are those used in the figured pronunciation of the Greek words in this book; they are explained in the section on Pronunciation below.

Printed	Written	Name		Sign
Α α		ἄλφα	alpha	a
Β β		βῆτα	vita	v
Γ γ		γάμμα	ghamma	gh, y, ng
Δ δ		δέλτα	dhelta	dh
Ε ε		ἒ ψιλόν	epsilon	e
Ζ ζ		ζῆτα	zita	z
Η η		ἦτα	ita	i
Θ θ		θῆτα	thita	th
Ι ι		ἰῶτα	iota	i
Κ κ		κάππα	kappa	k, ky, g, gy
Λ λ		λάμβδα	lamvdha	l, ly
Μ μ		μῦ	mi	m, n
Ν ν		νῦ	nyi	n, ny, m
Ξ ξ		ξῖ	ksi	ks
Ο ο		ὂ μικρόν	omikron	o
Π π		πῖ	pi	p, b
Ρ ρ		ρῶ	ro	r
Σ σ, ς*		σίγμα	sighma	s, z
Τ τ		ταῦ	taf	t, d
Υ υ		ὗ ψιλόν	ipsilon	i, f, v
Φ φ		φῖ	fi	f
Χ χ		χῖ	chi	kh, ch
Ψ ψ		ψῖ	psi	ps, bz
Ω ω		ὦ μέγα	omegha	o

* Sighma has two forms, as here shown, σ and ς. The second of these, called final sighma, σίγμα τελικόν, is written only at the end of a word.

Pronunciation—ἡ προφορά

Α α Pronounced like a in father, though often very short like a in ask (as pronounced in England and the New England States of America); never like a in hat. Represented in the figured pronunciation by a.

Β β Like the English v; never like b. Represented by v.

Γ γ This is the most difficult of all the Greek letters for an English-speaking foreigner to pronounce. When followed by a, αυ, o, ου, or ω, or another consonant (except γ, κ, χ, or ξ), it has the sound of a guttural g, approximately that of the North German g in Wagner, but there is also a suggestion of oo or w in it; indeed, to a native Greek the English word "wood" sounds almost as if it were written with an initial γ. The sound may be imitated by placing the vocal organs in the position to pronounce "hood," and then, without the slightest change in them, saying "good." For want of a better symbol this sound will be represented by gh. When γ is followed by a vowel or diphthong having an e or an i sound (αι, ε, ει, ευ, η, ηυ, ι, οι, υ, or υι), it is pronounced like the English y—still, however, with a guttural sound. Represented by y.

When followed by another γ, or by κ, χ, or ξ, it is pronounced as ng in "long." The second γ is then pronounced like κ under the same circumstances (see below).

Δ δ Always pronounced like th in "the." Represented by dh.

E ε Pronounced usually like a in "care," sometimes like e in "pen," and occasionally approximating a in "hate." The diphthong αι has the same sound. Represented by e.

Z ζ This has always the sound of English z. Represented by z.

H η Like i in "pique" or ee in "seen"; never like i in "sit." Sign, i.

Θ θ Like th in "thing." Represented by th.

I ι Pronounced like η. The diphthongs ει, οι, and υι also have the same pronunciation. This is represented by i.

K κ When followed by a, αυ, o, ου, or ω, or another consonant, it is pronounced like k. Represented by k. Before a vowel or diphthong having an e or i sound (αι, ε, ευ, ει, η, ηυ, ι, οι, υ, or υι), it is softened to ky, like c in "cure." Represented by ky. After γ or ν it is pronounced like g in "go," but if followed by an e or i sound, then as g in "figure." Represented by g or gy.

Λ λ Before an a, e, o, or oo sound, like l. Represented by l. Before an i sound it is pronounced like ll in million. Sign, ly.

M μ Like m. Represented by m. Before β or φ it sounds more like n than m. Sign n.

N ν Before an a, e, o, or oo sound, like n. Represented by n.

When followed by an i sound, like n in "new." Represented by ny.

Before π it is pronounced like m, the π then taking the sound of b. Represented by m.

Ξ ξ Like ks in "backs." Represented by ks.

O o Like o in "nor"; sometimes approximately, but never frankly, like o in "note"; never like o in "not." Represented by o.

Π π Pronounced as p, and so represented in the transliteration.

When preceded by μ or ν it takes the sound of b. Sign, b.

P ρ Like rr in "carry," but more strongly rolled than is usual in English. Represented by r.

Σ σ Like s in "sing." Represented by s.

When followed by β, γ, δ, λ, μ, ν, or ρ, it sounds like z. Sign, z.

T τ Like t, and so represented in the figured pronunciation.

When preceded by ν, it is pronounced as d. Represented by d.

Υ υ Like i in "pique"; never like any of the sounds of the English u. Represented by i.

In the diphthongs αυ, ευ, and ηυ, it has a consonantal value, being pronounced like f or v—like f when followed by θ, κ, ξ, π, σ, τ, φ, χ, and ψ; in all other cases like v. Sign, f or v.

The diphthong ου has the sound of oo in "mood." Represented by oo.

Φ φ Like f, and so represented in the transliteration.

X χ When followed by α, αυ, ο, ου, or ω, or another consonant, it has the sound of ch in the German "nach" or the Scotch "loch." Sign, kh.

When followed by an ε or ι sound it is pronounced like ch in the German "ich." The sound is here represented by ch. It should be strongly aspirated. The first of these sounds is made in the back part of the mouth, the second more toward the front.

Ψ ψ Like ps, and so represented in the figured pronunciation.

When preceded by μ or ν it has sometimes, but not always, the value of bs in "ribs." Represented by bz.

Ω ω Like o in "nor"; sometimes approximately, but never frankly, like o in "note"; never like o in "not." Represented by o.

There is no distinction in pronunciation between ο and ω.

Diphthongs—δίφθογγοι

There are eight diphthongs, or double letters, as follows:

Αι Pronounced like ε. Represented by e.

Αυ Like af or aβ (see the pronunciation of υ above). Sign, af or av.

Ει Like η or ι. Represented by i.

Ευ Like ef or eβ (see above, under υ). Represented by ef or ev.

Ηυ Like if or iβ (with the sound of ee in "reef," never that of i in "if"). Represented by if or iv.

Οι Like η or ι. It never has the sound of oi in "noise." Sign, i.

Ου Pronounced as ou in "you" or oo in "mood;" never like ou in "out." Represented by oo.

Υι Like η or ι. Represented by i.

There are also three semi-diphthongs, which are found for the most part in the dative singular of nouns or in the second and third person singular subjunctive of verbs. These are written by a stroke, representing ι (iota subscript, ὑπογεγραμμένον ἰῶτα), placed beneath the letters α, η, or ω, thus: ᾳ, ῃ, ῳ. These are pronounced exactly as α, η, and ω, no account being taken of the half-concealed iota. When the improper diphthong is written as a capital letter, it is marked by a small ι written after, and not beneath, the capital, thus: Αι, Ηι, Ωι. In such case the breathing (see below) is placed before the capital, and not over the ι as in proper diphthongs.

The Breathing—τὸ πνεῦμα

Every word beginning with a vowel has a sign (᾽) or (῾) placed over the initial letter. This is called the breathing. In ancient times, in all probability, it had to do with the pronunciation, the rough breathing (῾) indicating that the vowel was aspirated, and thus having the force of the English h in "had," while the smooth breathing (᾽) marked the absence of aspiration. At the present day there is no difference in pronunciation denoted by the breathings. The rough breathing has an influence, however, upon the consonant of certain prepositions, such as ἀπό, μετά, κατά, which, when immediately followed by a word beginning with a rough breathing, drop the final vowel and change the consonant to the corresponding aspirate, thus: ἀφ᾽, μεθ᾽, καθ᾽.

There is no rule for the use of the rough or smooth breathing, except that initial υ always takes the rough breathing.

An initial ῥ was formerly, and is occasionally, though seldom, now written with a rough breathing; and when a double ῥῥ occurred in the middle of a word, the first one took the smooth and the second the rough breathing.

When the word begins with a capital letter, the breathing, as well as the accent, is written to the left of the letter, and not over it; a diphthong, however, always takes the breathing and accent on its second component letter. In the case of an improper diphthong, when written with a capital (the ι being then placed to the right, after the manner of proper diphthongs), the accent or breathing is placed to the left of the main component and never over the ι.

The Accent—ὁ τόνος

An accent placed over a vowel indicates that that syllable receives the stress in pronunciation. There are three accents in Greek, the acute, ὀξεῖα (΄), the grave, βαρεῖα (`), and the circumflex, περισπωμένη (῀). The acute accent may fall upon any of the last three syllables of a word, the circumflex upon either of the last two, the grave only upon the last syllable. The acute accent can fall upon the third syllable from the end, the antepenult, only when the vowel of the final syllable is short; when it is long in quantity, the accent can be placed no farther back than the next to the last syllable, the penultimate; the circumflex can fall upon the penult only when this syllable is long and the final syllable short. The terminal syllable may receive either the circumflex, the acute, or the grave accent; when the acute accent falls upon the final syllable it is changed into the grave unless a mark of punctuation immediately follows.

Ten words never receive any accent. These are: the nominative, masculine and feminine, singular and plural, of the article, ὁ, ἡ, οἱ, αἱ; the prepositions εἰς and ἐν, in, and ἐκ (ἐξ), out of; the conjunctions εἰ, if, and ὡς, how; and the negative particle οὐ (οὐκ or οὐχ).

Certain other words lose their accent, except when they begin a sentence or are separated from the preceding word by a punctuation mark, throwing the accent back upon the terminal syllable of the preceding word. When this word is a paroxytone, that is, one having an acute accent on the next to the last syllable, the accent of the following word simply disappears, for two acute accents cannot fall on two contiguous syllables; it is also dropped entirely if the final syllable of the preceding word has a circumflex accent; if this syllable has a grave accent, the latter is changed to acute in such a case. Words of this class which throw their accent back on the terminal syllable of the preceding word are called enclitics, ἐγκλιτικαὶ λέξεις. The enclitics are: the indefinite pronoun τίς, τί, some one, something, in all its cases; the monosyllabic personal pronouns in the genitive (possessive pronouns), μοῦ, of me, σᾶς, of you, etc., and also the dative and accusative of the same pronouns, when they follow the verb, but not when they precede it; the adverbs πού, somewhere, πoθέν, from somewhere, ποτέ, sometimes, never, and πῶς, somehow; certain untranslatable particles such as γέ; and finally the indicative present of the ancient verb εἰμί, I am; but the modern form of this verb, εἶμαι, is not enclitic. If one of these words begins a sentence it retains its accent; if two or more follow each other, each throws the accent back on the preceding, so that only the final enclitic remains unaccented. The dissyllabic enclitics retain their accent when preceded by a paroxytone word or by a properispome ending in ψ or ξ.

The student should study carefully these remarks on pronunciation and should refer to them constantly in learning the "Thought Exercises" in the following lessons. Note especially the modifications in sound that certain consonants undergo according as they are preceded by another consonant or followed by a particular vowel sound. The only letters the pronunciation of which will present any real difficulty to an English-speaking student are γ and χ. The pronunciation of these, especially of the first, is difficult, and should be learned, if opportunity offers, from a native Greek.

Read the remarks on the breathings and accents, but do not try to learn them now. If they are read over carefully once in a while, they will soon be learned without any appreciable effort, and, once mastered, the rules are so simple and logical that they can never be forgotten, especially as their practical application will be constantly before you.

Learn the alphabet and the forms of the characters thoroughly. No substantial progress can be made until one is able to read the Greek words as readily as if they were printed in Roman characters; the only secret to success in this is constant practice. Exercises in the written character will be found in the Appendix.

LESSON SECOND

ΜΑΘΗΜΑ ΔΕΥΤΕΡΟΝ

The following lessons begin with a "Thought Exercise," a series of simple phrases expressive of certain physical actions. These sentences should be read aloud several times with the aid of the interlinear pronunciation until they can be repeated rapidly without hesitation. They should then be compared with the interlinear translation until their sense is fully appreciated. Then the appropriate actions should be performed as the words are pronounced, the student thinking only of what he is doing while speaking the Greek sentence, and not trying to recall the English equivalent of the Greek words. This exercise may seem a little tiresome at first, but if persevered in will soon become interesting and comparatively easy. When the phrases have been learned so that they immediately call up in the speaker's mind the actions which they represent, they should be practised at frequent intervals during the day, and when this has been done so often that the movement at once brings to the mind or the lips the Greek phrase descriptive of it, without the slightest effort of memory, the student may pass on to the "Conversation Exercise," which is made up of variants of the preceding exercise, in the form of questions and answers. These need not be learned by heart, but are simply to be read over several times aloud — not translated into English. In all the exercises, indeed, translation into English must be studiously avoided. As soon as the meaning of a new word has been grasped, necessarily at first through the English, the word itself should be associated mentally with its meaning without thought of its English equivalent. This is by no means such an impossible feat as the mere thumber of dictionaries imagines; after a little practice it will become instinctive, and it will be as natural to associate the Greek word or phrase directly with the idea, without the intervention of a definition, as it is thus to associate the English.

After having assimilated the meaning of the phrases in the "Conversation Exercise" return to the first—the "Thought Exercise." Go through the motions again and repeat the phrases that express them, and then write the sentence, first copying from the book and noting carefully the accents and breathings as well as the spelling. After copying the sentence two or three times, write it from memory and compare with the book; repeat this at intervals until you can write all the sentences in the first lesson without the slightest error in letter, accent, or breathing, and then, but not until then, take up the second lesson.

When alone, always read and recite aloud, for it is as necessary to train the ear as the eye, if not indeed even more necessary. When circumstances prevent loud recitation, think the phrases in the throat, as it were, whispering them or repeating them to yourself without phonation.

Thought Exercise

A literal translation of the Greek sentences is here given, but the student is cautioned against making use of this translation further than to learn the meaning of the Greek words. As just said, the latter must not be associated with their English equivalents, but only with the idea or the physical action they express. In using the figured pronunciation be careful to give the letters the value arbitrarily assigned them in the section on "Pronunciation" in the preceding lesson, laying the stress on the syllable accented in the Greek.

Ὑψόνω τὴν χεῖρά μου.
ipsono tin chira moo
I raise the hand my.

Κρατῶ τὴν χεῖρα ὑψωμένην.
krato tin chira ipsomenyin
I keep the hand raised.

Κλείω τὴν χεῖρά μου καὶ οὕτω κάμνω γρόνθον.
klyio tin chira moo kye ooto kamno ghrŏnthŏn
I close the hand my and thus I make fist.

Κτυπῶ τὴν τῆς ἄλλης χειρὸς παλάμην μὲ τὸν γρόνθον ktipo tin tis alyis chiros palamin me ton ghronthon μου.

moo

I strike the of the other hand palm with the fist my.

Κάμνω ταύτας τὰς κινήσεις μὲ τὴν δεξιάν μου χεῖρα.
kamno taftas tas kyinyisis me tin dheksian moo chira

I make these movements with the right my hand.

Ἀνοίγω τὴν χεῖρά μου.
anyigho tin chira moo

I open the hand my.

Καταβιβάζω αὐτὴν καὶ τὴν θέτω εἰς τὸ θυλάκιόν μου.
katavivazo aftin kye tin theto is to thilakyion moo

I lower it and it I place in the pocket my.

Θέτω ἐπίσης εἰς τὸ θυλάκιόν μου καὶ τὴν ἀριστεράν.
theto episis is to thilakyion moo kye tin aristeran

I put likewise in the pocket my also the left (hand).

Τώρα ἀμφότεραι αἱ χεῖρές μου εἶναι ἐντὸς τῶν θυλακίων tora amfotere e chirez moo ine endos ton thilakyion

μου.

Now both the hands my are within the pockets my.

Μοῦ in the preceding sentences is the possessive pronoun, my. It is the genitive of the personal pronoun, ἐγώ, I. Like all the possessive pronouns (except the forms used in the elevated style) it is enclitic, throwing its accent back on the terminal syllable of the preceding word. Thus in the seventh sentence in the preceding exercise, we find the phrase, εἰς τὸ θυλάκιόν μου. The accent of the noun is on the antepenult, but as the word is followed by an enclitic it receives a second accent on the ultima; the two words are pronounced as one, thilákyiónmoo, with a double accent.

The personal pronoun subject of a verb (ἐγώ, I, σεῖς or ὑμεῖς, you) is not expressed in Greek, except by way of comparison or for emphasis, as the termination of the verb indicates the number and person.

Conversation Exercise

Note the marks of punctuation. In Greek (;) is the mark of interrogation (?) and not a semicolon; the equivalent of our colon or semicolon is (·), a point at the upper edge of the line. The comma (,), period (.), and note of exclamation (!) are the same as in English. In some recent Greek books, especially school-books, the colon (:) is used for the same purposes as in English, the (·) being retained as the equivalent of the semicolon (;).

Ὑψόνω τὴν χεῖρά μου;	Do I raise my hand?
Μάλιστα, τὴν ὑψόνω.	Yes, I raise it.
Τίς ὑψόνει τὴν χεῖρα;	Who raises the hand?

Πῶς κάμνετε γρόνθον;	How do you make a fist?
Κάμνω γρόνθον κλείων τὴν χεῖρά μου.	I make a fist (by) closing my hand.

Τώρα ἀνοίγω τὴν δεξιάν μου χεῖρα.	Now I open my right hand.
Ἀνοίγετε καὶ τὴν ἀριστεράν σας;	Do you open your left also?

Ὄχι, δὲν ἀνοίγω τὴν ἀριστερά̀ν μου χεῖρα, διότι δὲν εἶναι κλειστή.	No, I do not open my left hand, for it is not closed.
Καὶ τί κάμνετε πρὸς τούτοις;	And what do you do after that?
Πρὸς τούτοις καταβιβάζω τὴν δεξιάν μου χεῖρα.	After that I lower my right hand.
Τίς καταβιβάζει τὴν χεῖρα;	Who lowers his hand?
Ἐγὼ καταβιβάζω τὴν χεῖρά μου.	I lower my hand.
Ποῦ θέτετε τὴν δεξιάν σας χεῖρα;	Where do you put your right hand?
Τὴν θέτω εἰς τὸ θυλάκιόν μου.	I put it in my pocket.
Ποίαν χεῖρα θέτετε εἰς τὸ θυλάκιόν σας;	Which hand do you put in your pocket?
Θέτω ἀμφοτέρας τὰς χεῖρας εἰς τὰ θυλάκιά μου.	I put both hands in my pockets.
Ποῦ εἶναι ἀμφότεραι αἱ χεῖρές σας;	Where are both your hands?
Ἀμφότεραι αἱ χεῖρες εἶναι ἐντὸς τῶν θυλακίων μου.	Both the hands are in my pockets.

Read these sentences several times aloud. If two are studying together, one should read the question and the other give the answer, first repeating the question. The one who responds can often, after repeating the question, give the correct answer without referring to the book. The sentences here given are simple, even trivial, but this is intentional; they are not meant primarily to amuse, but to serve as exercises in the practical employment of the Greek language. The multiplication table is not an entertaining game, but a necessary drill, and these exercises are the same.

Note the enclitics in these sentences. The pronouns τίς, τί, mean some one, something, or who? what? When signifying some one or something they are enclitic, but when employed as interrogative pronouns they retain the acute accent on the ι in all the case-forms, thus: ὑψόνει τις τὴν χεῖρα; does any one raise his hand? (τις enclitic), and τίς ὑψόνει τὴν χεῖρα; who raises his hand? (τίς interrogative, retaining the acute accent instead of changing it to the grave, as is the rule).

Grammar

The Article—Τὸ Ἄρθρον

In modern as in ancient Greek there is but one article, the definite. In the vernacular (ἡ κοινὴ γλῶσσα), however, the numeral one is quite commonly employed in the sense of the indefinite article, a, an. The definite article is declined as follows:

	Singular			Plural
	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
Nom.	ὁ	ἡ	τό	οἱ	αἱ	τά
Gen.	τοῦ	τῆς	τοῦ	τῶν	τῶν	τῶν
Dat.	τῷ	τῇ	τῷ	τοῖς	ταῖς	τοῖς
Acc.	τόν	τήν	τό	τούς	τάς	τά

The forms not beginning with a consonant (masculine and feminine nominative in both numbers) are unaccented and have the rough breathing; the genitive and dative in the three genders and both numbers receive the circumflex accent; the other forms take an acute accent or, when followed, as they naturally are, by another word, the grave accent. In familiar conversation the terminal ν of the accusative singular and genitive plural, of nouns and adjectives as well as of the article, is usually dropped, unless the following word begins with a vowel or unless the word ending in ν is the last of the sentence.

The dative case is seldom used in ordinary conversation (except in certain adverbial phrases, such as πρὸς τούτοις, in the present lesson), its place being taken by a preposition (εἰς, in, πρός, to) with the accusative. It should be carefully learned, however, for it is often used in oratory and in the higher style of composition.

The declension of the indefinite article in the vernacular is as follows:

	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
Nom.	ἕνας	μιά	ἕνα
Gen.	ἑνός, ἑνοῦ	μιᾶς	ἑνός, ἑνοῦ
Acc.	ἕνα	μιά(ν)	ἕνα

There is no dative in the vernacular. The line under the feminine forms, called synizesis (συνίζησις), indicates that the two syllables are pronounced as one, the ι having a semi-consonantal value, like the English y.

In the more elevated style the same word (in its literary form, εἷς, μία, ἕν—see Lesson XIV.) is sometimes, though rarely, employed, but more commonly the indefinite (enclitic) pronoun τις is used in this sense, thus: εἷς ἄνθρωπος or ἄνθρωπός τις, a man.

In the preceding exercise the verbs dependent upon ὅταν, when, such as ὑψόνητε, κλείητε, κτλ. (καὶ τὰ λοιπά, et cetera), having η instead of ε in the penult, are in the subjunctive mood; all the other verbs are in the present indicative.

Grammar

The Verb—Τὸ Ῥῆμα

The modern Greek verb is very simple in its construction, its mastery presenting few of the difficulties usually associated with this part of speech in the mind of the student of the classical form of the language. There are really but two tenses to be learned, the present and the aorist, all the others being formed from these.

It is important to learn the verb early in the study of a language, for it is the most necessary part of the sentence, the word, explaining the relationship of persons and things to each other. A foreigner who can handle his verbs correctly has little difficulty in being understood, even if he is occasionally at fault with the cases or genders of nouns and adjectives. It is for this reason that the usual order of grammars is reversed in this book, and the verb is studied before the other inflected parts of speech.

The teaching of grammar as a mental drill forms no part of this method, the aim of which is wholly practical, but an acquaintance with the inflections is necessary to a proper comprehension of the spoken and written language. When this has been acquired the student will be freed from the drudgery of grammatical forms and can proceed rapidly to the assimilation of Greek. The study of the niceties of the ancient grammar can then be undertaken intelligently and logically. If the student will learn thoroughly the simple grammatical notes in these lessons, he will know how to use the tools of the language, and the tools themselves, the vocabulary, will insensibly become his through practice of the thought, conversation, and reading exercises.

The Present Tense—ὁ ἐνεστώς

All verbs end, in the present indicative active (the dictionary form of the Greek verb), in ω.* (Some, called "deponents," have only the middle or passive termination, ομαι.) In the simple verbs this ω is unaccented, the word being a paroxytone (acute accent on the syllable before the last); the perispome or circumflex verbs (circumflex accent on the termination ῶ) belong to the class of contracted verbs which will be studied in the next lesson. The stem or root (ῥίζα) of the verb is that part which remains after cutting off the termination ω of the present indicative active, or ομαι of the present indicative middle. The process of finding the root is not always so easy, but the general rule is as here stated.

* There are still some verbs in occasional use, in the literary style, which end in μι. They are, however, of infrequent occurrence. They will be found among the irregular verbs in the Appendix.

Present Indicative Active of λύω, I loosen.

Singular	Plural
1. λύω, I loosen.	λύομεν, we loosen.
2. λύεις, thou loosenest.	λύετε, you loosen.
3. λύει, he loosens.	λύουσι(ν) or λύουν, they loosen.

The Subjunctive (ἡ ὑποτακτική) is formed from the Indicative (ἡ ὁριστική) by lengthening the initial vowel or diphthong of the termination, so that ε becomes η; ει, η; ο or ου, ω.

Present Subjunctive Active of λύω.

Singular	Plural
1. λύω, I may loosen.	λύωμεν, we may loosen.
2. λύῃς, thou mayest loosen.	λύητε, you may loosen.
3. λύῃ, he may loosen.	λύωσι(ν), they may, etc.

The subjunctive is employed only after certain conjunctions, the most common of which are ἄν, ἐάν, if; νά, ἵνα, that, in order that; and ὅταν, when. (Note the breathings on these words. As remarked in Lesson I., the breathing does not affect the pronunciation of the letter over which it is placed, hence whether it is rough or smooth can be learned only from observation. It is essential, however, to correct writing that it be properly marked.) The pronunciation of the subjunctive differs from that of the indicative (in the active voice) only in the second person plural, λύητε (lyíite) instead of λύετε (lyíete), and in the third person plural, λύωσιν (lyíosin) instead of λύουσιν (lyíoosin). This form of the third person plural is preferable to that terminating in ουν—the latter belongs rather to the vernacular and is seldom used in the literary language.

All the third persons plural, of whatever tense or mood, that end in σι take a ν ἐφελκυστικόν (attracted ν) when the verb ends the sentence or when the following word begins with a vowel.

In the spoken language the indicative is frequently employed instead of the subjunctive, when in the latter two i-sounds would come together, as in λύητε.

Grammatical Exercises

These grammatical exercises will be found exceedingly useful as a means of fixing the different parts of the verb firmly in the mind and thereby acquiring fluency in speaking and writing Greek. They are to grammar what the multiplication table is to arithmetic. If the student will practise these exercises conscientiously, orally and in writing, the forms of the verb will soon become so perfectly familiar that they will be used unconsciously, coming to the lips as instinctively as do those of his native tongue. The phrases should be read aloud several times and then be repeated from memory and also written down; the written exercise is then compared with the book, the mistakes, if any, corrected, and the sentences again written from memory. This should be repeated until the exercise can be recited correctly without hesitation. This will repay the most careful and conscientious practice, and ought on no account to be omitted.

Present Indicative

Θέτω τὴν χεῖρά μου εἰς τὸ θυλάκιον καὶ ἐκβάλλω τὸ ῥινόμακτρόν μου.

I put my hand in my pocket and take out my handkerchief.

Θέτεις τὴν χεῖρά σου εἰς τὸ θυλάκιον καὶ ἐκβάλλεις τὸ ῥινόμακτρόν σου.
Θέτει τὴν χεῖρά του εἰς τὸ θυλάκιον καὶ ἐκβάλλει τὸ ῥινόμακτρόν του.
Θέτομεν τὰς χεῖράς μας εἰς τὰ θυλάκια καὶ ἐκβάλλομεν τὰ ῥινόμακτρά μας.
Θέτετε τὰς χεῖράς σας εἰς τὰ θυλάκια καὶ ἐκβάλλετε τὰ ῥινόμακτρά σας.
Θέτουσι τὰς χεῖράς των εἰς τὰ θυλάκια καὶ ἐκβάλλουσι τὰ ῥινόμακτρά των.

Present Subjunctive

Πρέπει νὰ λύω τὰ σανδάλιά μου.*
I must untie my shoes.
Πρέπει νὰ λύῃς τὰ σανδάλιά σου.
Πρέπει νὰ λύῃ τὰ σανδάλιά του.
Πρέπει νὰ λύωμεν τὰ σανδάλιά μας.
Πρέπει νὰ λύητε τὰ σανδάλιά σας.
Πρέπει νὰ λύωσι τὰ σανδάλιά των.

Πρέπει is an impersonal verb meaning "it is necessary"; it is the exact equivalent of the French il faut. Πρέπει νά, followed by the subjunctive, means I (you, he, etc.) must.

* This refers to an habitual action, one that must be repeatedly performed. If it were desired to express an action to be performed at this particular time only, the aorist subjunctive would be used.

I repeat the same movements with the two feet alternately.

I stop.

Κάθημαι καὶ θέτω τὸ ἓν πόδι μου ἐπάνω εἰς τὸ ἄλλο kathime kye theto to en podhi moo epano is to alo (σταυρόνω τὰ πόδιά μου).
(stavrono ta podhya moo)

I sit down and I put the one foot my over on the other (cross the legs my).

The word meaning foot is πούς (gen. ποδός), a masculine noun, but in the last sentence we have τὸ πόδι (neuter). This is the form used in the vernacular which is very prone to change nouns in common use into the neuter with the termination ι. Thus, ἡ χείρ (feminine) becomes τὸ χέρι; the ancient form παῖς, child (masc. or fem.) becomes τὸ παιδί.

Conversation Exercise

Ποῦ περιπατεῖτε;	Where are you walking?
Περιπατῶ ἐπὶ τοῦ ἐδάφους.	I am walking upon the floor.
Μὲ ποίας κινήσεις ἀρχίζετε νὰ περιπατῆτε;	With what movements do you begin to walk?
Ἀρχίζω νὰ περιπατῶ ἐπὶ τοῦ ἐδάφους προβάλλων τὸν ἀριστερόν μου πόδα.	I begin to walk upon the floor by putting forward my left foot.

Ποῖον πόδα προβάλλετε πρῶτον;	Which foot do you extend first?
Πρῶτον προβάλλω τὸν ἀριστερόν μου πόδα.	I put forward first my left foot.
Καὶ ἔπειτα τί κάμνετε;	And then what do you do?
Τώρα κρατῶ τὸν ἑαυτόν μου ἐπὶ τῶν δακτύλων τοῦ ποδός μου.	Now I support myself upon my toes.
Ἐπὶ τῶν δακτύλων ποίου ποδὸς κρατεῖτε τὸν ἑαυτόν σας;	Upon the toes of which foot do you support yourself?
Κρατῶ τὸν ἑαυτόν μου ἐπὶ τῶν δακτύλων τοῦ ἀριστεροῦ ποδός.	I support myself upon the toes of the left foot.
Τί κάμνετε μετὰ ταῦτα;	What do you do after that?
Μετὰ ταῦτα κάμπτω τὸ γόνυ μου.	After that I bend my knee.
Ποῖον γόνυ κάμπτετε;	Which knee do you bend?
Κάμπτω τὸ δεξιόν μου γόνυ.	I bend my right knee.
Τώρα προβάλλετε τὸ ἀριστερόν σας σκέλος;	Do you now put your left leg forward?
Ὄχι, δὲν προβάλλω τὸ ἀριστερὸν ἀλλὰ τὸ δεξιόν.	No, I do not advance the left but the right (leg).
Πατεῖτε μὲ τὴν δεξιὰν πτέρναν ἐπὶ τοῦ ἐδάφους;	Do you tread with the right heel on the floor?
Μάλιστα, πατῶ μὲ τὴν δεξιὰν πτέρναν ἐπὶ τοῦ ἐδάφους.	Yes, I tread with the right heel on the floor.
Τώρα κρατεῖσθε ἐπὶ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ποδός;	Now do you support yourself upon the same foot?
Μάλιστα, κρατοῦμαι ἐπὶ τοῦ δεξιοῦ μου ποδός.	Yes, I support myself upon my right foot.

Τίς ὑψόνει τὸν ἑαυτόν του ἐπὶ τῶν δακτύλων τοῦ δεξιοῦ ποδός;

Who raises himself upon the toes of the right foot?

Ἐγὼ ὑψόνω τὸν ἑαυτόν μου ἐπὶ τῶν δακτύλων τοῦ δεξιοῦ ποδός.

I raise myself upon the toes of the (my) right foot.

Τί κάμνετε, ὅταν κινῆσθε κατ' αὐτὸν τὸν τρόπον;

What do you do when you move yourself in this way?

Ὅταν κινῶμαι κατ' αὐτὸν τὸν τρόπον, βηματίζω.

When I move myself in this manner I take a step.

Ἐπαναλαμβάνετε τὰς αὐτὰς κινήσεις μὲ τὸν ἄλλον πόδα;

Do you repeat the same movements with the other foot?

Ναί, ἐπαναλαμβάνω τὰς αὐτὰς κινήσεις μὲ τοὺς δύω πόδας ἐναλλάξ.

Yes, I repeat the same movements with the two feet alternately.

Ὅταν περιπατῆτε, ἀπὸ ποίων ἀρθρώσεων γίνονται αἱ κινήσεις;

When you walk, at what joints do the movements take place?

Ὅταν περιπατῶ, αἱ κινήσεις γίνονται ἀπὸ τῶν ἰσχίων, τῶν γονάτων, τῶν σφυρῶν καὶ τῶν ἀρθρώσεων τῶν δακτύλων.

When I walk the movements take place at the hips, the knees, the ankles, and the joints of the toes.

Τώρα στέκετε;

Do you stop now?

Ναί, τώρα στέκω.

Yes, I stop now.

Καὶ ἔπειτα κάθησθε;

And then do you sit down?

Ναί, ἔπειτα κάθημαι.

Yes, then I sit down.

Τί κάμνετε, ὅταν κάθησθε;

What do you do when you sit down?

Ὅταν κάθημαι, θέτω τὸ ἓν πόδι μου ἐπάνω εἰς τὸ ἄλλο.	When I sit down I cross my legs (put one foot over the other).
Ὅταν θέτητε τὸ ἓν πόδι σας ἐπάνω εἰς τὸ ἄλλο, εἶσθε καλά;	When you cross your legs are you comfortable (all right)?
Μάλιστα, τώρα εἶμαι πολὺ καλά.	Yes, now I am all right.

Note that ναί, yes, signifies the exact opposite of the English word of the same sound. Ναί and μάλιστα both mean yes; the latter is somewhat more emphatic, yes, indeed! certainly! equivalent to the German ja wohl!

Ἀρθρώσεων.—The accent here is on the antepenult, although the final syllable contains the long vowel ω. This exception to the rule of accentuation occurs in the genitive singular and plural of many nouns of this class belonging to the third declension.

Grammar

The Middle or Passive Voice—Τὸ μέσον ἢ παθητικόν

In the preceding exercises we have met with several verbs in the present indicative or subjunctive, the terminations of which were different from those given in the grammatical part of the third lesson. Such terminations were κρατ-οῦμαι, κρατ-εῖσθε, κάθ-ημαι, γίν-ονται: they belong to verbs in the middle or passive voice. The middle voice indicates that the action of the verb is exerted by the subject with reference to himself; the passive, that the action is exerted by another with reference to the subject. Thus, σηκόνω (active) means I raise; σηκόνομαι (middle), I raise myself, I rise; σηκόνομαι (passive), I am raised (by another person or a thing);—δράττω (active), I grasp (something); δράττομαι (middle), I grasp (something) for myself, for my own purpose; δράττομαι (passive), I am grasped (by somebody else). There is no difference in form between the middle and passive. Certain verbs have a passive or middle form with an active (or neuter) meaning, as ἔρχομαι, I go. These are called deponent verbs.

The following are the terminations of the present indicative and subjunctive passive of λύω, I loosen. The middle of verbs which admit this meaning is, as just said, the same in form as the passive.

PASSIVE

INDICATIVE		SUBJUNCTIVE
λύομαι	λυόμεθα	λύωμαι	λυώμεθα
λύεσαι	λύεσθε	λύησαι	λύησθε
λύεται	λύονται	λύηται	λύωνται

In the examples thus far given it will be noticed that the accent is thrown as far back as the quantity of the final syllable will permit. This is the rule throughout the conjugation of the verb, except in the perfect participle, in certain moods of the aorist, and in the second future passive which is derived from the aorist. The apparent exception to this rule in the case of contracted verbs (see below) is the natural and necessary sequence of the contraction and its sign. In κτυπάω, for example, the accent falls regularly upon the α, and when this vowel is absorbed in the contracted termination (κτυπάω - κτυπῶ) the accent still clings to the same syllable, becoming circumflex instead of acute.

Contracted Verbs—Συνῃρημένα ῥήματα

We have had several verbs (κτυπῶ, κινῶ, κρατῶ, κτλ.) in the preceding lessons which ended in ῶ (circumflex accent on the termination). These are examples of contracted verbs, the full form of which would end in άω or έω. There is also a third class of contracted verbs in όω-ῶ, but in the modern usage this contraction is generally avoided by the insertion of a ν between the stem and the termination, in the present and imperfect tenses. Ὑψόνω is an example of a verb of this class, the ancient form (only very seldom employed at the present day) being ὑψόω-ὑψῶ.

The contraction does not take place in the aorist tenses, for in these, as we shall see in Lesson VI., the vowel of the stem is separated from that of the termination by σ or θ. In these forms the vowel of the stem is lengthened, α or ε becoming η (except in a few verbs, a list of which will be found in the Appendix), and ο becoming ω. The contraction follows certain definite rules which may readily be deduced from the following paradigms. The uncontracted forms here given are never used, but are shown merely for the sake of comparison.

The conjugation of a contracted verb in ῶ may be learned by reference to a dictionary, which usually gives the full form; when the contracted form is given, the full form (άω, έω, or όω) is added in parentheses. In the case of a passive or deponent verb the full form is indicated by the termination, ῶμαι-άομαι, and οῦμαι-έομαι or όομαι. Verbs in όω are, however, now written όνω or sometimes ώνω, hence passive όνομαι or ώνομαι. It should be noted that the dictionary form of the Greek verb is the first person singular present indicative, and not the infinitive.

I am going (continued action) down-stairs, moving the feet my inversely than before.

The initial κ of κλίμακα, accusative singular of ἡ κλίμαξ, the stairs, being preceded immediately by ν, is pronounced, in ordinary conversation, as g: τὴν κλίμακα —tin glyímaka; for the same reason, in the second sentence, τὴν κατωτάτην βαθμίδα is pronounced tin gatotátin vathmídha; in the same sentence, τῆς κλίμακος is pronounced tis klyímakos, since the κ is preceded by ς and not ν.

Grammar

The Imperfect—ὁ παρατατικός

There are four past tenses in Greek—namely, the imperfect, aorist, perfect, and pluperfect.

The imperfect, which is wanting in the subjunctive mood, is formed from the present by changing the termination ω of the active into ον, and ομαι of the middle or passive into όμην.

The Augment.—The imperfect and the aorist indicative take a prefix to the stem in the shape of the letter ε, called the augment, ἡ αὔξησις. To verbs with an initial consonant this letter is prefixed without change, being then called the syllabic augment. Verbs beginning with ρ, however, double this letter when taking the augment; thus: ρίπτω, to throw; aorist, ἔρριψα. (The ρ is also doubled in compounds: καταρρίπτω, to throw down.) In the case of verbs beginning with a long vowel (η or ω) or the diphthongs ει or ου, there is no augment. In verbs beginning with a short vowel or with a diphthong other than ει or ου, the initial syllable is lengthened. This is called the temporal augment; it is formed by changing initial α to η, ε to η, ο to ω, αι to ῃ, αυ to ηυ, οι to ῳ, ευ to ηυ. Before ῐ or ῠ (short) the ε is absorbed and the vowel is lengthened to ῑ or ῡ (long), a change that is imperceptible in prose to either the eye or the ear.* Nine verbs beginning with ε form the temporal augment in ει instead of η. A list of these will be found in the Appendix.

The search in the dictionary for a verb of which the imperfect or aorist indicative only is known will be facilitated by remembering that the imperfect or aorist initial ει corresponds to the present initial ε (in nine verbs) or ει ευ corresponds to the present initial ευ η " " " " " α, ε, or η

ῃ " " " " " αι

* Remember that ει, η, ι, οι, υ, and υι, whether long or short, are always pronounced like i in pique—never like i in pit.

ηυ	corresponds	to	the	present	initial	αυ or ευ
ι	"	"	"	"	"	ι
ου	"	"	"	"	"	ου
υ	"	"	"	"	"	υ
ω	"	"	"	"	"	ο or ω
ῳ	"	"	"	"	"	οι

This is a useful table, a little study of which now will perhaps save tedious search through the dictionary in future reading.

Verbs compounded with prepositions take the augment immediately after the preposition; when the latter ends in a vowel this disappears; thus, ἀνα-βαίνω, I ascend, becomes ἀν-έβανον, I was ascending. The final vowel of περὶ or πρὸ is, however, never elided, though the ο of πρὸ sometimes forms a contraction with the augment ε, the two being fused into ου. The existence of this contraction is indicated by the coronis (') placed over the υ: thus προ-χωρῶ, I advance, becomes προὐχώρουν, I was advancing. This contraction does not take place in words in which the augment receives the accent; thus, προ-λέγω, I predict, becomes προέλεγον, I was predicting.

Verbs compounded with words or particles other than prepositions take the augment at the beginning of the word; thus, τοποθετῶ, I place, becomes ἐτοποθέτουν, I was placing. An exception to this rule exists in the case of verbs compounded with δὺς or εὖ when this prefix is followed immediately by a short vowel; thus, εὐαρεστῶ, I please, becomes εὐηρέστουν, I was pleasing. When, however, a long vowel or a consonant follows the prefix, the augment is placed at the beginning of the verb; εὐλογῶ, I bless, becomes ηὐλό-γουν, I was blessing.*

In the vernacular the augment is sometimes placed before the preposition instead of after it, e. g. the imperfect of περι-πατῶ, I walk, may be ἐπεριπάτουν or περιεπάτουν. In the vernacular also the augment is usually omitted in all verbs beginning with a vowel and in those of more than two syllables.

Note that many of the examples above given are of verbs in έω-ῶ, the full termination of the imperfect, εον, therefore being contracted into ουν.

* Εὑρίσκω, I find, takes no augment, the imperfect being εὕρισκον. Note the rough breathing; εὖ and words compounded with it have the smooth breathing.

As already stated, the verbs in όω-ῶ, in the modern language, insert a ν before the termination (όνω or ώνω), and are then conjugated as verbs with consonantal stem. It is only occasionally in the elevated literary style that they suffer a contraction in the present and imperfect tenses.

Conversation Exercise

Hereafter in the Conversation Exercises the questions only will, as a rule, be given, and the student is expected to form the replies himself. Read the question first aloud and then give the answer, which will be very easy if the preceding Thought Exercise have been carefully learned. If two are studying together, let one ask the question and the other repeat the question, without looking at the book, and then give the answer. After the exercise has been gone through with in this way, it is a good plan to copy the questions on paper and then write the answers to them.

Ὅταν θὰ κάμητε περίπατον, τί πρέπει νὰ φορέσητε; Τί λαμβάνετε εἰς τὴν δεξιάν σας χεῖρα; Εἰς τί λαμβάνετε τὸ ἀριστερόν σας χειρόκτιον; Τοὺς δακτύλους ποίας χειρὸς εἰσάγετε; Τί θέτετε εἰς τὰ δάκτυλα τῆς χειρός σας; Ποῦ θέτετε τοὺς δακτύλους τοῦ χειροκτίου σας; Εἰς τὰ δάκτυλα ποίας χειρὸς θέτετε τοὺς δακτύλους τοῦ ἀριστεροῦ σας χειροκτίου; Καὶ τί θέτετε ἔπειτα; Θέτω καὶ τὸν ἀντίχειρα. Τί κάμνετε τώρα; Ποῦ κομβόνετε αὐτό; Τί κάμνετε κατόπιν;[1] λαμβάνω τὸ ἄλλο[2] χειρόκτιον εἰς τὴν ἄλλην χεῖρα. Ὅταν ἔχητε φορέσει τὰ χειρόκτιά σας, τί πρέπει νὰ λάβητε; Ὅταν ἀνοίγητε τὴν θύραν, ἐξέρχεσθε; Ὅταν ἐξέρχησθε, κλείετε τὴν θύραν; Τί τρύζει; Τρύζει αὐτὴ πολύ; ὄχι, δὲν τρύζει πολὺ, ἀλλὰ τρύζει ὀλίγον. Θὰ ἐνθυμηθῆτε νὰ ἀλείψητε δι' ἐλαίου τὴν θύραν, ὅταν ἐπιστρέψητε; Τί πρέπει νὰ κάμνωσιν,[3] ὅταν τρύζῃ ἡ θύρα; πρέπει νὰ τὴν ἀλείψωσι δι' ἐλαίου.

[1] After that. [3] Other. [2] Τί πρέπει νὰ κάμνωσιν; what is to be done (what is it necessary that they do)? The Greeks, like the English, often employ the third person plural in a general sense, as λέγουσιν ὅτι—they say that. The ν is here added because the following word begins with a vowel.

Grammar

The Aorist—ὁ ἀόριστος

The aorist and the imperfect are the past tenses in most frequent use; they both express a past action, yet differ essentially in meaning. The imperfect expresses an action that was performed repeatedly or habitually in the past, while the aorist refers to an action that was performed but once; thus: ἔγραφον (imperfect), ὅταν εἰσῆλθε (aorist), I was writing when he entered.

Modern Greek retains as a rule but one of the two aorists of the ancient language, and this usually the first. A few verbs in common use, however, have only the second aorist.

The first aorist indicative is formed from the present by prefixing the augment and changing the termination ω of the active into σα and ομαι of the passive or middle into θην. In the case of the contracted verbs the α or ε of the stem is lengthened to η. In a few verbs of this class, however, no vowel change takes place (see Appendix). An instance of this occurs in the Thought Exercise of the present lesson, in πρέπει νὰ φορέσω, I must put on, from φορῶ (έω). In the case of verbs in όνω or ώνω, which in the ancient language have the form of a contracted verb in ῶ-όω, the ο is lengthened to ω (or the ω of the present is retained), and the ν is dropped.

The augment is found only in the indicative. In the passive the termination takes the circumflex accent, forming an exception to the general rule that the accent of the verb is thrown as far back as the quantity of the final syllable will permit. Another exception to this rule is that, in compound words, the accent can never fall back beyond the augment or, in case there is none, beyond where it would naturally be; thus: εἰσάγω, I introduce, becomes in the imperfect εἰσῆγον, and not εἴσηγον.

Συνεκινήθητε ἐκ τῆς εἰδήσεως τοῦ θανάτου τῆς ἐξαδέλφης σας.
Συνεκινήθησαν ἐκ τῆς εἰδήσεως τοῦ θανάτου τῆς ἐξαδέλφης των.

Συνεκινήθην is the aorist of the middle verb, συγκινοῦμαι, I am touched, moved, agitated. When σύν or ἐν is joined to a verb beginning with γ, κ, or χ, the ν is changed to γ. Similarly before β, π, or φ it becomes μ: before λ, μ, or ρ, it becomes λ, μ, or ρ respectively; before σ it disappears. When the preposition and the main part of the verb are separated by the augment, the ν reappears.

Reading Exercise

Hereafter each lesson will include a short selection for reading, with the aim chiefly of giving to the student a good working vocabulary. In order to acquire this vocabulary it is not sufficient to learn to translate the selection so that the English equivalent can be given when the Greek is before the eyes. The student must be able to give the Greek equivalent of the English sentence, or rather the Greek expression of the idea contained in the English sentence—a very different matter! The aim of the present method is to teach the student to associate his ideas with the Greek expression of them, and the reverse; not to associate a word or a sentence of one language with the corresponding word or sentence in the other. Indeed, there are few words in any language which find their exact equivalent in the words of another idiom. Of course, in a method for self-instruction, as this aims primarily to be, it is necessary to go from the known to the unknown, to explain the meaning of the Greek sentence in English words; but as soon as this meaning is grasped, the student must attach it to the Greek phrase and then dismiss the English from his mind.

In using this exercise for the purpose of enlarging his vocabulary, the student should read and re-read the selection until he can understand it perfectly without referring to, or even thinking of, the English version. After this, he should read each sentence over once or twice, and immediately repeat it while looking away from the book. The entire selection may be learned by heart if desired (it will be found helpful), but this is not essential; all that is insisted upon is that each independent sentence be repeated (not simply read from the printed page) with full appreciation of its meaning, and that it be repeated aloud. When the whole has been gone through with in this way, the student should exercise himself upon it by forming questions and answering them, in Greek, using the material furnished by the selection just read. As an example of how this is to be done, a "Vocabulary Exercise" is appended to this section, but in subsequent lessons the student must construct it for himself. It is not necessary to do this in writing, but whether written or not it must always be recited viva voce. Nothing helps more to the acquisition of a language than vocal practice. Whenever circumstances permit, all the exercises should be read and recited aloud, for this will give a familiarity with the language that no amount of mental reading will afford. A language cannot be learned unless it be heard, and if you cannot hear others speak it you must hear yourself, even if your pronunciation be not that of the polished Athenian. It is better to speak broken Greek than not to understand it at all.

Κυρία τις περιεπάτει ποτὲ μόνη εἰς τόπον ὅπου εὑρίσκοντο τίγρεις. Ἓν δὲ τῶν τρομερῶν τούτων ζώων ἐμφανισθὲν αἰφνηδίως ἤρχισε νὰ πλησιάζῃ πρὸς αὐτὴν. Τί ἐδύνατο ἐκείνη νὰ πράξῃ πρὸς ὑπεράσπισίν της; Εἰς μίαν στιγμὴν ἐπενόησε μέθοδον, διὰ τῆς ὁποίας ἤθελε δυνηθῇ ἴσως νὰ ἀποδιώξῃ τὴν τίγριν. Ἀνοίγει αἰφνηδίως πρὸς τὴν τίγριν τὸ ἀλεξήλιον, τὸ ὁποῖον ἐκράτει εἰς τὴν χεῖρά της, καὶ τὸ θηρίον τρομάξαν ἐκ τούτου ἀμέσως ἐστράφη καὶ ἔφυγε δρομαίως εἰς τὰ δάση.

The Lady and the Tiger.

A lady was once walking alone in a place where tigers were found. One of these terrible animals appearing suddenly began to draw near to her. What could she do for her defense? In a moment she thought of a plan by means of which she might perhaps be able to drive away the tiger. She opens suddenly in the face of the tiger the parasol, which she was holding in her hand, and the beast, taking fright at this, immediately turned about and fled incontinently into the woods.

Vocabulary Exercise

The following is given as an example of an exercise by means of which the student may fix in his memory the meaning of the words occurring in the preceding selection and thereby enlarge his vocabulary. The exercise will not be written out in the subsequent lessons, for it is by formulating the questions and answers himself that the student will most easily and quickly learn the words. This is a very useful exercise, as a little practice in it will demonstrate, and it should be faithfully performed. Other words with which the student is already familiar may be introduced in order to amplify and vary the sentences.

* More commonly written ἠδύνατο, having a double augment, first the syllabic augment, ε, and then this lengthened with the temporal augment to η.

Ποῦ περιεπάτει κυρία τις; κυρία τις περιεπάτει εἰς τόπον, ὅπου εὑρίσκοντο τίγρεις. Τίς περιεπάτει εἰς τόπον, ὅπου εὑρίσκοντο τίγρεις; κυρία τις περιεπάτει εἰς τόπον, ὅπου εὑρίσκοντο τίγρεις. Τί ἠδύνατο ἐκείνη νὰ πράξῃ πρὸς ὑπεράσπισίν της; ἐπενόησε μέθοδον, διὰ τῆς ὁποίας ἤθελε δυνηθῆ νὰ ἀποδιώξῃ τὴν τίγριν. Τί κάμνει; (what does she do?) ἀνοίγει πρὸς τὴν τίγριν τὸ ἀλεξήλιόν της. Ἐκράτει ἡ κυρία τὸ ἀλεξήλιον εἰς τὴν χεῖρά της; μάλιστα, ἡ κυρία ἐκράτει τὸ ἀλεξήλιον εἰς τὴν χεῖρά της. Ἐστράφη τὸ θηρίον; ναί, τὸ θηρίον τρομάξαν ἐκ τούτου ἐστράφη. Ἐστράφη τὸ θηρίον ἀμέσως; τὸ θηρίον ἐστράφη ἀμέσως. Ἔφυγε τὸ θηρίον εἰς τὰ δάση; τὸ θηρίον ἔφυγε εἰς τὰ δάση. Ἔφυγε δρομαίως ἡ τίγρις εἰς τὰ δάση; μάλιστα, ἡ τίγρις ἀμέσως ἐστράφη καὶ ἔφυγε δρομαίως εἰς τὰ δάση.

Grammar

The Future—ὁ μέλλων

There are three futures in Modern Greek: the first, or imperfect, expressing a continued or habitual action;

the second, or aorist, expressing an action that is to be performed but once; and the perfect, expressing a future action contingent upon another action. The ancient form of the future is seldom used at the present day. The first (or imperfect) future is formed by θὰ with the present subjunctive or θέλω with the present infinitive; the second (or aorist) future is formed by θὰ with the aorist subjunctive, or θέλω with the aorist infinitive. The sign of the future is θὰ or θέλω, and according as one or the other is used we have two forms each of the first and second future. The second form (θέλω, I wish, I will, with the infinitive) corresponds exactly in construction to the English future; thus, θέλει λύει, he will loosen (frequently), and θέλει λύσει, he will loosen (once). This form is, however, regarded as less elegant and is less frequently employed than the other—θὰ followed by the subjunctive present or aorist. The particle θὰ is a contraction of θέλω νὰ, I will that; θὰ λύω therefore means I will that I may loosen (habitually); θὰ λύσω I will that I may loosen (once). It is because of this (concealed) νὰ that the subjunctive present or aorist is employed after θά. The perfect future is formed of the future of ἔχω (θὰ ἔχω) with the aorist infinitive; thus θὰ ἔχω λύσει, I shall have loosened, the construction being exactly like the English.

Θὰ κρυόνωσι πάντοτε τὸν χειμῶνα ἐφ' ὅσον ζῶσιν.

Repeat this exercise with the second form of the first future, as follows:

Θέλω κρυόνει πάντοτε τὸν χειμῶνα ἐφ' ὅσον ζῶ, κτλ.

Θὰ κρυώσωσι, διότι ἔβρεξαν τοὺς πόδας των.

Repeat this with the second form of the second future, as follows:

Θέλω κρυώσει διότι ἔβρεξα τοὺς πόδας μου, κτλ.

Perfect Future

Τὴν ἑνδεκάτην ὥραν θὰ ἔχητε γράψει τὴν ἐπιστολήν.
Τὴν ἑνδεκάτην ὥραν θὰ ἔχωσι γράψει τὴν ἐπιστολήν.

Second Future and Aorist Subjunctive

Δὲν θὰ δυνηθῶ νὰ λάβω μάθημα τὴν προσεχῆ ἑβδομάδα, διότι θὰ ὑπάγω εἰς τὴν ἐξοχὴν δι' ὀλίγας ἡμέρας.

I shall not be able to take a lesson next week, for I shall go to the country for a few days.

Δὲν θὰ δυνηθῶσι νὰ λάβωσι μάθημα τὴν προσεχῆ ἑβδομάδα, διότι θὰ ὑπάγωσιν εἰς τὴν ἐξοχὴν δι' ὀλίγας ἡμέρας.

Βρέχω, I wet, when used impersonally, i.e. in the third person singular without subject or object, means it rains. Compare the Thought Exercise in this lesson, in which the word is employed in both senses.

In the last of the above exercises, the verbs δύναμαι, to be able, λαμβάνω, to take, and πηγαίνω, to go, are all irregular; they are in frequent use, however, and have been purposely selected for this exercise in order to impress their aorist forms upon the learner's memory.

Τροχιόδρομος, tramway (lit. wheel-way), is used here in the sense of the vehicle running on the tramway. Similarly formed words are σιδηρόδρομος, railway (lit. iron-way), and ἱπποσιδηρόδρομος, horse railway.

Σημαίνει τὸν κώδωνα, rings the bell (an idiomatic expression); σημαίνω means to signify — τί σημαίνει αὕτη ἡ λέξις; what does this word mean?

Πολύ, meaning much, is frequently employed in the sense of very, too.

[1] Πρὸς τὴν κάτω πόλιν means toward the lower part of the city, in that direction; εἰς τὴν κάτω πόλιν means into the lower part of the city [2] When you enter—referring to this particular instance, therefore the aorist—where will you sit? [3] When you enter—in a general sense, therefore the present—where do you sit? [4] And what are you going to do (with) it? [5] Σημάνῃ, σταματήσῃ are in the aorist subjunctive. In dependent clauses and in the imperative the aorist is used, without reference to the time, to express an action that is performed but once and not habitually. This is not the case in the indicative, however, for here there would be a confusion of tenses were the aorist used to denote a present action. [6] Whence.

Ἡ ἐπιτίμησις τοῦ αὐλικοῦ.

Αὐλικός τις εἶπεν ἐνώπιον Λουδοβίκου τοῦ ΙΔ′. (δεκάτου τετάρτου), ὁμιλῶν περί τινος κυρίου, ὅτι θὰ ἠδύνατό τις νὰ γράψῃ ὀγκώδες βιβλίον ἐξ ὅσων δὲν ἤξευρεν ἐκεῖνος. The Rebuke of the Courtier.

A certain courtier said in the presence of Louis XIV., speaking of a certain gentleman, that one would be able to write an immense book out of what he did not know. But Louis, who did not like ill-natured jests, replied instantly: "And I think that one could make a very small book of what you do know."

Grammar

The Conditional—ἡ ὑποθετικὴ ἢ δυνητικὴ

The conditional mood in Modern Greek, which here takes the place of the optative in the ancient form of the language, is related in its formation, as in English, to the future tense. There are three conditionals as there are three futures. The first, or imperfect, expresses a continued or habitual action; the second, or aorist, an action that is to be performed but once if the necessary condition is met; the perfect is seldom employed.

The first conditional is formed by θὰ with the imperfect indicative or by the imperfect of θέλω (ἤθελον) with the present infinitive. The second is formed by the imperfect indicative of θέλω with the aorist infinitive. The perfect is formed by θὰ with the pluperfect indicative.

The distinction between the forms of the conditional is not so sharply drawn as in the case of the future; θὰ with the imperfect may be used for either the first or the second conditional; in the forms with θέλω, however, the distinction is maintained.

The main proposition upon which the condition depends is expressed by ἂν or ἐὰν with the imperfect indicative; thus, ἂν ἤμην πλούσιος, ἤθελον περιηγεῖσθαι, if I were rich, I would travel.

First (Imperfect) Conditional

ἤθελον κτυπᾶσθαι, κτλ.

ἤθελον κινεῖσθαι, κτλ.

ἤθελον ὑψοῦσθαι, κτλ.

Second (Aorist) Conditional

(Formed by the imperfect of θέλω with the aorist infinitive.)

Active	Passive
ἤθελον λύσει, κτλ.	ἤθελον λυθῆ, κτλ.
ἤθελον κτυπήσει, κτλ.	ἤθελον κτυπηθῆ, κτλ.
ἤθελον ὑψώσει, κτλ.	ἤθελον ὑψωθῆ, κτλ.

As was noted in the lesson on the Future, the full form of the aorist infinitive passive (or middle) is λυθῆναι, etc., but the terminal syllable is dropped in the compound tenses.

Note that the imperfect of θέλω is ἤθελον, and not ἔθελον as it should be regularly. Θέλω is one of a small number of words which take a double augment, εε contracted to η. See foot-note concerning δύναμαι on page 49.

Εἶχον σπουδάσει is the pluperfect of σπουδάζω, to study; θὰ ὡμίλουν is the first conditional of ὁμιλῶ(έω), to speak.

Conversation Exercise

In the Thought Exercises the verbs are necessarily in the present tense, or occasionally in the future, and those in the Conversation Exercises have been hitherto in the same two tenses. Hereafter, however, other tenses will be introduced in the latter in order to give the student practice in all the forms of the verb. It will be useful for him to construct exercises for himself after the model of those in the previous grammatical sections, employing phrases from the Thought Exercises with which he is already familiar. For example : πλύνω τὸ πρόσωπόν μου μὲ ψυχρὸν ὕδωρ, πλύνεις τὸ πρόσωπόν σου μὲ ψυχρὸν ὕδωρ, πλύνει τὸ πρόσωπόν του (or της, her) μὲ ψυχρὸν ὕδωρ, κτλ. (καὶ τὰ λοιπά, et cetera.)

Ποῦ πηγαίνετε ; Πηγαίνετε εἰς τὸν λουτρῶνα ; Διατί ἀφήνετε τὸ ὕδωρ νὰ τρέχῃ ; ἀφήνω τὸ ὕδωρ νὰ τρέχῃ διὰ νὰ γεμίσῃ ἡ λεκάνη. Ἀφήνετε τὸ ψυχρὸν νὰ τρέχῃ ; ὄχι, δὲν ἀφήνω τὸ ψυχρὸν ἀλλὰ τὸ θερμὸν νερόν νὰ τρέχῃ. Τί χύνετε εἰς τὴν λεκάνην ; Ποῖον νερὸν ἐχύσατε[1] εἰς τὴν λεκάνην ; ἔχυσα τὸ ψυχρὸν νερὸν εἰς τὴν λεκάνην. Ἀπὸ ποῦ θὰ χύσητε τὸ ὕδωρ εἰς τὴν λεκάνην ; θὰ χύσω τὸ

ὕδωρ εἰς τὴν λεκάνην ἀπὸ τὴν ὑδρίαν. Ὅταν λαμβάνητε τὸν σάπωνα, ποῦ βυθίζετε αὐτόν; Ὅταν βυθίζητε τὸν σάπωνα εἰς τὸ ὕδωρ, τί κάμνετε αὐτόν;[2] Μεταξὺ τίνων στρέφετε τὸν σάπωνα; στρέφω αὐτὸν μεταξὺ τῶν χειρῶν μου. Καὶ ἔπειτα ποῦ θέτετε τὸν σάπωνα; Κάμνει πολὺν ἀφρὸν αὐτὸς ὁ σάπων; Ἐπλύνατε τὸν ἀφρὸν τοῦ σάπωνος μὲ νερόν; Μὲ ποῖον ὕδωρ πρέπει νὰ πλύνητε τὸν ἀφρόν; πρέπει νὰ πλύνω τὸν ἀφρὸν τοῦ σάπωνος μὲ καθαρὸν ὕδωρ. Μὲ ποῖον ὕδωρ θὰ πλύνητε τὸ πρόσωπόν σας; μὲ ψυχρὸν ὕδωρ. Ἐὰν εἴχετε θερμὸν νερόν, θὰ ἐπλύνετε τὸ πρόσωπόν σας; ναί, ἐὰν εἶχον θερμὸν νερόν, θὰ ἔπλυνον τὸ πρόσωπόν μου μὲ αὐτό. Τί θὰ μετεχειρίζεσθε, ἐὰν ἐπλύνετε τὸ πρόσωπόν σας; ἐὰν ἔπλυνον τὸ πρόσωπόν μου, θὰ μετεχειριζόμην σπόγγον. Μεταχειρίζεσθε σπόγγον, ὅταν πλύνητε τὸ πρόσωπόν σας; ναί, μεταχειρίζομαι σπόγγον, ὅταν πλύνω τὸ πρόσωπόν μου. Μετεχειρίσθητε σπόγγον, ὅταν ἐπλύνατε τὸ πρόσωπόν σας; μάλιστα, μετεχειρίσθην σπόγγον, ὅταν ἔπλυνα τὸ πρόσωπόν μου. Σφογγίζετε τὰς χεῖρας καὶ τὸ πρόσωπόν σας μεταχειριζόμενος προσόψιον (χειρόμακτρον); Τί μεταχειρίζεσθε, ὅταν σφογγίζητε τὰς χεῖράς σας; ὅταν σφογγίζω τὰς χεῖράς μου, μεταχειρίζομαι προσόψιον (χειρόμακτρον). Ὅταν σφογγίζητε τὸ πρόσωπόν σας, μεταχειρίζεσθε τὸ αὐτὸ[3] προσόψιον; ὄχι, μεταχειρίζομαι ἄλλο προσόψιον, ὅταν σφογγίζω τὸ πρόσωπόν μου.

[1] Verbs whose stem ends in a liquid (λ, μ, ν, ρ) regularly take no σ in the aorist termination. Χύνω is, however, irregular in this respect. [2] Τί κάμνετε αὐτόν; what do you do (with) it? [3] The same.

Reading Exercise

Ἡ ἀνδρία ἢ ἡ δικαιοσύνη.

Valor or Justice.

Some one asked Agesilaus, King of Sparta, "which virtue is worthy of preference, valor or justice?" He replied: "If all men were just, valor would be superfluous."

Socrates once met an acquaintance of his and greeted him in a friendly manner, but the latter did not return the salutation. "Why dost thou greet a man so ill-bred?" said the disciples to their master. "Eh," replied Socrates, "is it necessary that I too should be as rude as he?"

Grammar

The Imperative—ἡ προστακτική

There are two forms of the Imperative, the imperfect (usually called, after the analogy of other languages, the present) and the aorist. These two bear the same relation to each other as do the corresponding forms of the indicative or future,* that is to say, the imperfect imperative expresses a command to perform repeated or habitual actions, while the aorist commands the performance of a single action; thus: λύε τὰ σανδάλιά σου πρὶν νὰ τὰ ἐκβάλλῃς, untie your shoes before you take them off (imperfect, commanding an action to be performed as often as the shoes are taken off);

* The future, as regards its construction, may be looked upon as a mood rather than a tense.

λύσε τὰ σανδάλιά σου, διότι εἶναι καιρὸς νὰ κατακλιθῇς, untie your shoes, for it is time you went to bed (aorist, expressing a command referring to this particular time only).

For the persons other than the second the imperative employs the subjunctive, preceded by ἂς (a contraction of ἄφες, the imperative of the ancient verb ἀφίημι, modern form ἀφήνω or ἀφίνω, to permit, let). Compare the English, let us see, ἂς ἴδωμεν. In the more elevated style of oratory the subjunctive may be employed alone, without ἄς: this is a return to the ancient form of the imperative. Φέρε (imperative of φέρω, to bring, manage) or ἄγε (imperative of ἄγω, to bring) may also, though rarely, be used in place of ἄς.

In the following paradigms, the order of persons is 2d pers. sing. and plur., 1st pers. plur., and 3d pers. sing. and plur. The forms in parentheses (in the aorist) are those used in the literary style.

In Modern Greek, as in English, the polite form of address is in the second person plural. The singular is employed in familiar conversation among the members of a family and between intimate friends, and also in speaking to young children and inferior servants and laborers. Cases in which the singular may be used without giving offence are instinctively appreciated by a native, but cannot be strictly defined. A foreigner had better, therefore, always adhere to the plural, for the only error into which he could fall by so doing would be one of over-politeness, which, though sometimes amusing, is always pardonable.

Ἂς μὴ ἔλθῃ, ἀφοῦ δὲν θέλει
Ἂς μὴ ἔλθωσιν, ἀφοῦ δὲν θέλουσιν.

Negative Imperfect Imperative

Μὴ περιφρονῇς μήτε τὸν πτωχὸν μήτε τὸν ἀσήμαντον.
Despise not (n)either the poor (man) (n)or the insignificant.
Μὴ περιφρονεῖτε μήτε τὸν πτωχὸν μήτε τὸν ἀσήμαντον.
Ἂς μὴ περιφρονῶμεν μήτε τὸν πτωχὸν μήτε τὸν ἀσήμαντον.
Ἂς μὴ περιφρονῇ μήτε τὸν πτωχὸν μήτε τὸν ἀσήμαντον.
Ἂς μὴ περιφρονῶσι μήτε τὸν πτωχὸν μήτε τὸν ἀσήμαντον.

With a negative the subjunctive form instead of the imperative is employed in the second person, except the second person plural of the imperfect, which retains the imperative form (as seen in the second sentence of the third exercise). The Greeks employ the double negative, despise not neither—nor, etc.

* May be written ἀφοῦ or ἀφ' οὗ.

Æsop was once going to a small town; on the way he met a traveller who, making a bow, asked him: "How long a time have I yet to walk before arriving at that little town which we see from here?"

"March," answered Æsop. "I know well," replied the traveller, "that I must walk; but tell me after how long a time I shall arrive there." "March," repeated Æsop.

This man is crazy, thought to himself the stranger, and I must not question him further, and he proceeded on his way.

Then Æsop called out: "Eh, one word, thou wilt arrive in two hours."

The stranger turned back and asked: "How dost thou know it now, and why didst thou not wish to tell it to me a little while ago?" But Æsop replied: "How could I tell thee before I saw thy gait?"

Grammar

The Infinitive—ἡ ἀπαρέμφατος

There are two infinitives in each voice, viz., the present and the aorist. They are formed by adding the terminations ειν and σαι to the stem in the active voice, and εσθαι and θῆναι in the passive.

Active		Passive
Present	Aorist	Present	Aorist
λύειν	λύσαι	λύεσθαι	λυθῆναι
κτυπᾶν	κτυπήσαι	κτυπᾶσθαι	κτυπηθῆναι
κινεῖν	κινῆσαι	κινεῖσθαι	κινηθῆναι
ὑψοῦν	ὑψῶσαι	ὑψοῦσθαι	ὑψωθῆναι

In the compound forms (future, conditional, perfect, and pluperfect) the final ν, of the present active, and ναι, of the aorist passive, are dropped; the termination of the aorist active, σαι, becomes σει. The infinitive of κτυπῶ is written without iota subscriptum, which would seemingly belong to it, since the termination is a contraction of α and ειν. In the infinitive of ὑψῶ (the contracted form, which is scarcely ever used in Modern Greek) the full form is ὑψοῦν, while the form without final ν, used in the compound tenses, is ὑψοῖ.

Except as the infinitive enters into the formation of the compound tenses, it is employed only as a verbal noun. It is then accompanied by the neuter article, which is regularly declined; thus: τὸ δίδειν εἶναι εὐαρεστότερον τοῦ λαμβάνειν, to give is more blessed than to receive; τὸ ἱππεύειν εἶναι εὐάρεστος κίνησις, riding is a pleasant exercise.

In all other cases the English infinitive is rendered by νά with the subjunctive or by ὅτι with the indicative.* For example: εἶναι καιρὸς νὰ κατακλιθῶ, it is time for me to go to bed; τί θέλετε νὰ εἴπητε; what do you wish to say? δὲν ἐνθυμοῦμαι ὅτι σᾶς τὸ εἶπον, I do not remember to have told you that.

Even when employed as a verbal noun the infinitive is very commonly rendered by νά with the subjunctive, usually then preceded by the neuter article just as when the infinitive form is used. For example: τὸ νὰ καταγελᾷ τις τοὺς ἄλλους εἶναι ἀνάγωγον, to laugh at others is ill bred.

Vocabulary Exercise

To be prepared in the usual way, and on no account to be omitted.

Grammar

The Participle—ἡ μετοχή

There are five participles in Modern Greek, namely, present and aorist active, and present, aorist, and perfect passive or middle. In addition to these there are occasionally employed also a future and a perfect active, and a future passive.

The participles are declined like adjectives (see Lesson XXI.) and, like them, must agree with their subject in gender, number, and case.

Active

Present

Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
λύων	λύουσα	λῦον
κτυπῶν	κτυπῶσα	κτυπῶν
κινῶν	κινοῦσα	κινοῦν
ὑψῶν	ὑψοῦσα	ὑψοῦν

Aorist

Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
λύσας	λύσασα	λῦσαν
κτυπήσας	κτυπήσασα	κτυπῆσαν
κινήσας	κινήσασα	κινῆσαν
ὑψώσας	ὑψώσασα	ὑψῶσαν

The future participle is formed from the aorist by changing the termination ας into ων. The perfect is formed by adding to the present stem the terminations κώς, κυῖα, κός, and, like the perfect passive, takes the reduplication (see below). These forms are seldom used.

PASSIVE

PRESENT

Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
λυόμενος	λυομένη	λυόμενον
κτυπώμενος	κτυπωμένη	κτυπώμενον
κινούμενος	κινουμένη	κινούμενον
ὑψούμενος	ὑψουμένη	ὑψούμενον

AORIST

Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
λυθείς	λυθεῖσα	λυθέν
κτυπηθείς	κτυπηθεῖσα	κτυπηθέν
κινηθείς	κινηθεῖσα	κινηθέν
ὑψωθείς	ὑψωθεῖσα	ὑψωθέν

The perfect passive participle is formed from the aorist indicative by changing the termination θην into μένος, μένη, μένον (note the accent, differing from that of the present participle, which has similar terminations), and in addition the stem takes the reduplication (ὁ ἀναδιπλασιασμός). By this is meant the repetition of the initial consonant of the verb, with an interposed ε. It occurs in verbs beginning with a single consonant (except ρ) or with a mute followed by a liquid (except γν).* Those beginning with an aspirated consonant, φ, χ, or θ, take the corresponding hard consonant, π, κ, or τ, in the reduplication. Verbs beginning with a vowel, ρ, or either of the double consonants, ξ or ψ, take the augment (see Lesson V.) instead of the reduplication. Those compounded with a preposition take the reduplication between the preposition and the proper stem of the verb. In the vernacular the reduplication is commonly omitted; it is omitted also in the literary language whenever it would cause cacophony or when the word is already unduly long without the addition of this extra syllable. In the ancient language the reduplication was found in several forms that are not in use in modern Greek.

* The mute consonants are nine in number: π, β, φ, κ, γ, χ, τ, δ, θ; the liquids, or semi-vowels, are λ, μ, ν, ρ.

Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
λελυμένος	λελυμένη	λελυμένον
ἐκτυπημένος	ἐκτυπημένη	ἐκτυπημένον
κεκινημένος	κεκινημένη	κεκινημένον
ὑψωμένος	ὑψωμένη	ὑψωμένον

The accent, to which attention has already been directed, departs here from the general rule according to which it should be thrown as far back as the quantity of the final syllable would permit. Κτυπῶ, beginning with a mute not followed by a liquid, takes the augment instead of the reduplication.

The participles in Greek are used in much the same way as they are in English. The second reading extract in this lesson contains examples of the perfect and aorist participles.

The Second Aorist

This form is used in place of the ordinary First Aorist in the case of only a few verbs. Its terminations in the indicative active are the same as those of the imperfect. In the other moods the terminations are the same as those of the present, except that the accent, contrary to the general rule, falls upon the final syllable in the infinitive and participle. The seldom-employed second aorist passive is formed from the active by changing the ον into ην. The following are the verbs of this class which are most commonly met with:

Present	Aorist
Ἄγω, to lead,	ἤγαγον
*ἁμαρτάνω, to sin,	ἥμαρτον
ἀποθνήσκω, to die,	ἀπέθανον
*ἀφικνοῦμαι, to reach,	ἀφικόμην

Τὸ τεθραυσμένον πέταλον.

Εἰς τὸ πρῶτον χωρίον ὅπου ἔφθασαν ἐπώλησεν αὐτὸ τῷ σιδηρουργῷ ἀντὶ πέντε λεπτῶν καὶ ἠγόρασε δι' αὐτῶν κεράσια.

The Broken Horseshoe.

A certain peasant was going with his son, the little Thomas, to the city. "Look," he said on the way, "there's a piece of a horseshoe on the ground, pick it up and put it in thy pocket." "Oh," answered Thomas, "it is not worth the trouble of stooping down for that." The father answered nothing, but, stooping down, picked up the iron and put it in his bag. At the first village where they arrived he sold it to the blacksmith for five centimes and bought cherries with them. Then they continued their walk. The sun was burning, but nowhere appeared either house or wood or spring. Thomas was almost dying of thirst and scarcely was able to follow his father. Then the latter pretended ἕνα κεράσιον. Ὁ Θωμᾶς μετὰ τοιαύτης λαιμαργίας τὸ ἀνήρπασεν ἐκ τῶν χωμᾶτων ὡς ἐὰν ἀνεῦρε χρυσὸν καὶ τὸ ἔχωσε ταχέως εἰς τὸ στόμα του. Ὀλίγα βήματα παραιτέρω ὁ πατὴρ ἔρριψεν ἄλλο κεράσιον, τὸ ὁποῖον ὁ Θωμᾶς κατέπιε μετὰ τῆς αὐτῆς ὀρέξεως καὶ προθυμίας. Τοῦτο κατ' ἐξακολούθησιν ἐπανελήφθη ἕως οὗ ἐξηντλήθησαν πάντα τὰ κεράσια.

to drop a cherry accidentally on the ground. Thomas snatched it from the ground with as much eagerness as if he had found some gold, and thrust it into his mouth. A few steps farther the father dropped another cherry which Thomas swallowed with the same relish and promptitude. This was subsequently repeated until all the cherries were used up.

Ἀφοῦ ὁ Θωμᾶς ἔφαγε καὶ τὸ τελευταῖον ὁ πατὴρ ἐστράφη πρὸς αὐτὸν καὶ εἶπεν· "Βλέπε, ἐὰν ἅπαξ μόνον ἔκυπτες διὰ νὰ σηκώσῃς τὸ πέταλον, δὲν θὰ ἦσο ἠναγκασμένος νὰ κύψῃς ἑκατοντάκις διὰ τὰ κεράσια."

After Thomas had eaten the very last one his father turned to him and said: "See, if thou hadst stooped once only to pick up the horseshoe then wouldst thou not have been compelled to stoop a hundred times for the cherries."

Vocabulary Exercise

This exercise should never be omitted, for it is exceedingly useful as a means to the acquirement of a good stock of words.

Grammar

Distinction between Aorist and Imperfect

The Greek verb distinguishes very clearly between a continued or habitual action and one that is performed but once, the former being expressed by the present or imperfect, the latter by the aorist tenses; thus: ἤρχετο καθ' ἑκάστην (imperfect), he came every day; ἦλθε σήμερον (aorist), he came to-day. This distinction is made not only in the past tenses, but in the present and future as well. Thus in the subjunctive, imperative, future, conditional, infinitive, and participle, the present or imperfect form expresses a continued or repeated action, while the aorist denotes a single or inceptive action, whether this be present, past, or future. In the indicative, however, the aorist can be used to indicate past time only, and past time in which there is no conception of duration or repetition.

A careful comparison of the following examples will make this use of the aorist clear.

Ἔγραφον χθὲς ὅτε ἔκρουσέ τις τὴν θυραν, I was writing yesterday when some one knocked at the door.

Χθὲς ἔγραψα πέντε ἐπιστολάς, I wrote five letters yesterday.

Θέλω νὰ σᾶς γράφω ἐπιστολὴν καθ' ἑκάστην, I want to write you a letter every day.

Θέλω νὰ γράψω πέντε ἐπιστολὰς σήμερον, I want to write five letters to-day.

Θὰ σᾶς γράφω καθ' ἑκάστην, I shall write you every day.

Θὰ σᾶς γράψω ἐπιστολὴν αὔριον, I shall write you a letter to-morrow.

Ἤθελον γράφει καλῶς ἐὰν εἶχον σπουδάσει ἐπιμελῶς, I would write well if I had studied diligently.

Ἤθελον γράψει πέντε ἐπιστολὰς ἐὰν εἶχον καιρόν, I would write five letters if I had time.

Γράφετε καλῶς, εἶναι σημεῖον ἀνθρώπου πεπαιδευμένου, write well; it is the mark of an educated man.

Γράψατε πέντε ἐπιστολὰς σήμερον, write five letters to-day.

THE PERFECT AND PLUPERFECT—ὁ παρακείμενος καὶ ὑπερσυντελικός

The perfect is formed usually, both in the active and in the passive, by the present of ἔχω with the aorist infinitive, thus:

ACTIVE		PASSIVE
ἔχω λύσει	ἔχομεν λύσει	ἔχω λυθῆ	ἔχομεν λυθῆ
ἔχεις λύσει	ἔχετε λύσει	ἔχεις λυθῆ	ἔχετε λυθῆ
ἔχει λύσει	ἔχουσι λύσει	ἔχει λυθῆ	ἔχουσι λυθῆ

The perfect active is also formed occasionally by the present of ἔχω with the perfect participle passive in the accusative case, agreeing in gender and number with the object; as, for example: ἔχω λελυμένα τὰ σανδάλιά μου, I have untied my shoes. Similarly the perfect passive may be formed by the present of εἶμαι with the perfect participle passive agreeing with the subject in gender and number, as εἶμαι λελυμένος.

The following ancient forms of the perfect are occasionally, though very rarely, employed in the most elevated literary style:

Active		Passive
λέλυκα	λελύκαμεν	λέλυμαι	λελύμεθα
λέλυκας	λελύκατε	λέλυσαι	λέλυσθε
λέλυκε	λελύκασι(ν)	λέλυται	λέλυνται

The pluperfect is formed by εἶχον, the imperfect of ἔχω, with the aorist infinitive active or passive, thus:

Active		Passive
εἶχον λύσει	εἴχομεν λύσει	εἶχον λυθῆ	εἴχομεν λυθῆ
εἶχες λύσει	εἴχετε λύσει	εἶχες λυθῆ	εἴχετε λυθῆ
εἶχε λύσει	εἶχον λύσει	εἶχε λυθῆ	εἶχον λυθῆ

These tenses are not in very common use, all forms of past action being usually expressed by the imperfect or aorist.

Perfect

Ἔχω ἀπολέσει τὸ βαλάντιόν μου.
I have lost my purse.
Ἔχεις ἀπολέσει τὸ βαλάντιόν σου.
Ἔχει ἀπολέσει τὸ βαλάντιόν του.
Ἔχομεν ἀπολέσει τὰ βαλάντιά μας.
Ἔχετε ἀπολέσει τὰ βαλάντιά σας.
Ἔχουσιν ἀπολέσει τὰ βαλάντιά των.

The above could be equally well or better expressed by the aorist, thus:

Ἀπώλεσα, -ας, -ε τὸ βαλάντιόν μου, σου, του.
Ἀπωλέσαμεν, -ατε, -αν τὰ βαλάντιά μας, σας, των.

Pluperfect Indicative and Aorist Subjunctive

Εἶχον ἤδη ἀπολέσει τὸ ὡρολόγιόν μου, ὅταν ἀνέγνωσα τὴν ἐπιγραφήν· "Προφυλαχθῆτε ἀπὸ τοὺς βαλαντιοτόμους."

I had already lost my watch, when I read the sign: "Beware of pickpockets."

Εἶχες ἤδη ἀπολέσει τὸ ὡρολόγιόν σου, ὅταν ἀνέγνωσας τὴν ἐπιγραφήν· "Προφυλαχθῆτε ἀπὸ τοὺς βαλαντιοτόμους."

Conversation Exercise

The student is reminded that the advantage to be derived from this exercise depends in a great measure upon the conscientiousness with which he follows the directions for its employment. The sentences given are chiefly in the forms of questions for which the student himself must find the answers. After having read the question once or twice until its meaning is thoroughly grasped, repeat it aloud and immediately give the reply. The questions should be varied by changing the tenses and also occasionally by turning them into commands, employing the different persons and numbers of the imperative and also the positive and negative forms.

Τίς θὰ σηκωθῇ; Θὰ σηκωθῆτε ἀμέσως; Πόθεν[1] σηκόνεσθε; Σηκωθεὶς ἐκ τοῦ καθίσματος ἵστασθε; Προὐχωρεῖτε[2] πρὸς τὴν θύραν, ὅταν ἤνοιξέ τις αὐτήν; Τίς προὐχώρησε πρὸς τὴν θύραν; Ἐπλησίασέ τις τὴν θύραν; Ἐπλησιάσατε τὴν θύραν; Ἐφθάσατε εἰς τὴν θύραν πρὶν ἀνοίξωσιν αὐτὴν τὰ παιδία;[3] Φθάσας εἰς

[1] Whence. [2] May also be written ἐπροχωρεῖτε, imp., Were you going toward the door when some one opened it? [3] Children.

τὴν θύραν θὰ σταματήσητε ἐκεῖ; Διατί ἐκτείνετε τὸν βραχίονά σας; τὸν ἐκτείνω ἵνα δράττωμαι τοῦ μήλου τῆς θύρας.[1] Διατί ἐξετείνατε τὸν βραχίονά σας; τὸν ἐξέτεινα ἵνα δράξωμαι τοῦ μήλου τῆς θύρας. Μὴ κρατήσητε[2] τὸ μῆλον τῆς θύρας. Πρέπει νὰ στρέψητε τὸ μῆλον διὰ νὰ ἀνοίξητε τὴν θύραν; Κλείσας τὴν θύραν τί κάμνετε; Ἐκλειδώσατε τὴν θύραν; Τί εἶναι κλειστὸν καὶ κλειδωμένον; Ὅταν ξεκλειδώσητε τὴν θύραν τί κάμνετε; Καὶ ὅταν ἀνοίξητε αὐτὴν κρατεῖτε ἀκόμη[3] τὸ μῆλον; Ἀνοίξας τὴν θύραν ἀφήσατε τὸ μῆλον αὐτῆς; Τότε ποῦ ἐπεστρέψατε; Ἐπεστρέψατε εἰς τὸ κάθισμά σας; Ὅταν ἐπεστρέψατε εἰς τὸ κάθισμα ἐκαθήσατε πάλιν;

[1] I stretch it out in order to take hold of the knob of the door; here used in a general sense—whenever I stretch it out I do so in order to take hold, etc. If it were meant to refer to this particular occasion only, the sentence would read, τὸν ἐκτείνω ἵνα δράξωμαι τοῦ μήλου τῆς θύρας. [2] In negative commands the imperative form of the verb is used only in the second person plural of the imperfect; in all other cases the subjunctive form is used. (See p. 87.) [3] Still.

Σελὶμ ὁ Γ'. (τρίτος) ἀπαντήσας καθ' ὁδὸν παιδίον ἐρχόμενον ἀπὸ τὸ σχολεῖον προσεκάλεσεν αὐτὸ καὶ τῷ ἠρώτησε ποῖον εἶναι τὸ μάθημά του. Τὸ παιδίον ἀνοῖξαν τὸ βιβλίον του ἔδειξε τὸ μάθημά του χωρὶς νὰ γνωρίζῃ ὅτι ἦτο ὁ Σουλτάνος. Οὗτος εἶπεν εἰς τὸ Selim III. and the Quick-witted Boy.

Selim III., meeting on the road a boy coming from school, called him and asked him what his lesson was. The boy, opening his book, pointed out his lesson, without knowing that it was the Sultan. He told the boy to read a little, and seeing the recita-

Τὸ παιδίον εὐθὺς ἐπέστρεψε τὸ φλωρίον εἰς τὸν Σουλτάνον, λέγων· "Δὲν δύναμαι νὰ δεχθῶ τὸ δῶρόν σου καθ' ὅτι, ἐὰν ὁ πατήρ μου μὲ ἐρωτήσῃ ποῦ εὗρον τὸ φλωρίον, δὲν θὰ ἠξεύρω τί θὰ τῷ ἀποκριθῶ." Ὁ Σουλτάνος ἀπεκρίθη· "Εἰπὲ ὅτι σοὶ τὸ ἔδωκεν εἷς ἄνθρωπος." "Εἶναι ἀδύνατον, εἶπε τὸ παιδίον, νὰ τὸ πιστεύσῃ, διότι ποῖος ἄνθρωπος χαρίζει εἰς μικρὸν παιδίον ἓν φλωρίον." Ὁ Σουλτάνος ἐπρόσθεσεν· "Εἰπὲ ὅτι σοὶ τὸ ἔδωκεν ὁ Σουλτάνος." "Τότε μάλιστα, εἶπε τὸ παιδίον, παντάπασι δὲν θέλει τὸ πιστεύσει." "Διατί," ἠρώτησεν ὁ Σουλτάνος. tion without mistake and the readiness and acuteness of his mind, gave him a florin. The boy straightway returned the florin to the Sultan, saying: "I cannot accept thy gift, for the reason that, if my father asks me where I found the florin, I shall not know what to reply to him." The Sultan answered: "Say that a man gave it to thee." "It is impossible," said the boy, "that he should believe it, for what man makes a present of a florin to a little boy!" The Sultan added; "Say that the Sultan gave it to thee." "Then especially," said the boy, "he will most certainly not believe it." "Why?" asked the Sultan. "Because," replied the boy, "sultans do not give one florin, they bestow many; so that the florin which thou givest me, if it be the gift of a man, is much, but if it be that of a sultan, it is little. For that reason take back thy florin."

Θαυμάσας ὁ Σουλτάνος τὴν φρόνιμον ἀπόκρισιν καὶ εὐτολμίαν τοῦ παιδίου, εἰς αὐτὸ μὲν ἐχορήγησε μεγάλην ποσότητα φλωρίων, προσκαλεσάμενος δὲ τὸν πατέρα ἐζήτησε παρ' αὐτοῦ τὸ παιδίον, τὸ ὁποῖον παρέλαβεν εἰς τὸ παλάτιον, διορίσας διδασκάλους διὰ τὴν ἐμπαίδευσίν του· ἀφοῦ δὲ ἐξεπαιδεύθη ἀρκετὰ καὶ ἡλικιώθη, τὸ ἐτίμησε μὲ βαθμοὺς μεγάλους, τιμήσας ταὐτοχρόνως καὶ τὸν πατέρα του μὲ βαθμὸν ἀνάλογον τῆς ἱκανότητός του.

The Sultan, admiring the thoughtful answer and the courage of the boy, gave him a large sum of florins; and having sent for the father, begged of him the boy, whom he received into the palace, appointing teachers for his education; and after he was educated sufficiently and had grown older, honored him with lofty titles, honoring at the same time his father with a title proportionate to his ability.

Grammar

The Aorist of Pure and Impure Verbs

Verbs are distinguished as pure or impure according as the final letter of the present stem (the character, ὁ χαρακτήρ) is a vowel (or diphthong) or a consonant. The two classes of verbs present certain differences in the formation of the aorist, active or passive, and the tenses derived from it.

In pure uncontracted verbs (λύ-ω) the character remains unchanged in the aorist. In pure contracted, or perispome, verbs (κτυπῶ, ά-ω, κινῶ, έ-ω, ὑψῶ, ό-ω), the character is lengthened usually, so that a or ε becomes η, and o becomes ω.

In impure verbs the character undergoes certain changes, with most if not all of which the student should by this time be practically familiar from having repeatedly encountered them in the preceding exercises. These changes are as follows:

β, π, ϕ, and $\pi\tau$ are contracted with the following σ of the aorist to ψ.

Ex. $\tau\rho\acute{\iota}\beta\omega$, to rub, $\ddot{\varepsilon}\tau\rho\iota\psi\alpha$ $\pi\acute{\varepsilon}\mu\pi\omega$, to send, $\ddot{\varepsilon}\pi\varepsilon\mu\psi\alpha$ $\gamma\rho\acute{\alpha}\phi\omega$, to write, $\ddot{\varepsilon}\gamma\rho\alpha\psi\alpha$ $\kappa\acute{\upsilon}\pi\tau\omega$, to stoop, $\ddot{\varepsilon}\kappa\upsilon\psi\alpha$

γ, κ, χ, $\sigma\sigma$, $\tau\tau$, and $\sigma\kappa$ are contracted with the following σ to ξ.

Ex. $\grave{\alpha}\nu\circ\acute{\iota}\gamma\omega$, to open, $\ddot{\eta}\nu\circ\iota\xi\alpha$ $\pi\lambda\acute{\varepsilon}\kappa\omega$, to knit, $\ddot{\varepsilon}\pi\lambda\varepsilon\xi\alpha$ $\delta\iota\delta\acute{\alpha}\sigma\kappa\omega$, to teach, $\grave{\varepsilon}\delta\acute{\iota}\delta\alpha\xi\alpha$ $\beta\rho\acute{\varepsilon}\chi\omega$, to wet, $\ddot{\varepsilon}\beta\rho\varepsilon\xi\alpha$ $\pi\rho\acute{\alpha}\tau\tau\omega$, to make, do, $\ddot{\varepsilon}\pi\rho\alpha\xi\alpha$

Three verbs in $\sigma\sigma$ or $\tau\tau$, viz., $\grave{\varepsilon}\rho\acute{\varepsilon}\sigma\sigma\omega$, to row, $\pi\acute{\alpha}\sigma\sigma\omega$, to sprinkle, and $\pi\lambda\acute{\alpha}\tau\tau\omega$ or $\pi\lambda\acute{\alpha}\sigma\sigma\omega$, to form, take in the aorist active $\sigma\alpha$ instead of $\xi\alpha$.

δ, θ, τ, and ζ are dropped before the σ of the aorist.

Ex. $\sigma\pi\varepsilon\acute{\upsilon}\delta\omega$, to hasten, $\ddot{\varepsilon}\sigma\pi\varepsilon\upsilon\sigma\alpha$ $\pi\varepsilon\acute{\iota}\theta\omega$, to persuade, $\ddot{\varepsilon}\pi\varepsilon\iota\sigma\alpha$ $\theta\acute{\varepsilon}\tau\omega$, to put, $\ddot{\varepsilon}\theta\varepsilon\sigma\alpha$ $\grave{\alpha}\gamma\circ\rho\acute{\alpha}\zeta\omega$, to buy, $\grave{\eta}\gamma\acute{\circ}\rho\alpha\sigma\alpha$

A few verbs in ζ form the aorist in $\xi\alpha$, as $\nu\upsilon\sigma\tau\acute{\alpha}\zeta\omega$, to be sleepy, $\grave{\varepsilon}\nu\acute{\upsilon}\sigma\tau\alpha\xi\alpha$. $\Sigma\alpha\lambda\pi\acute{\iota}\zeta\omega$, to trumpet, has $\grave{\varepsilon}\sigma\acute{\alpha}\lambda\pi\iota\gamma\xi\alpha$.

λ, μ, ν, and ρ are preserved, the σ of the usual aorist termination being omitted. In this case the vowel immediately preceding the character is changed, ε becoming ει, αι becoming α, and ῐ and ῠ being lengthened to ῑ and ῡ, a change that may affect the accent in certain moods of the aorist. In the case of λλ, one is dropped.

Ex. ἀγγέλλω, to announce, ἤγγειλα περιμένω, to wait, περιέμεινα διανέμω, to distribute, διένειμα σύρω, to draw, pull, ἔσυρα ξηραίνω, to dry, ἐξήρανα
βάλλω, to put, ἔβαλα

Passive

In pure uncontracted verbs the character undergoes no change, except, however, that verbs of this class frequently take a σ between the character and the θ of the aorist termination: e.g. κλείω, to close, ἐκλείσθην· θραύω, to break, ἐθραύσθην· ἀκούω, to hear, ἠκούσθην.

The character in the case of contracted verbs is lengthened in the same way as in the active voice. The modifications as regards the character of the impure verbs are as follows:

β, π, and πτ are changed to φ before θ.

Ex. τρίβω, to rub, ἐτρίφθην
πέμπω, to send, ἐπέμφθην κάμπτω, to bend, ἐκάμφθην

γ, κ, σσ, ττ, and σκ are changed to χ.

Ex. ἀνοίγω, to open, ἠνοίχθην
πλέκω, to knit, ἐπλέχθην

πράττω, to do, ἐπράχθην διδάσκω, to teach, ἐδιδάχθην

δ, θ, τ, and ζ change the character to σ before θ.

Ex. σπεύδω, to hasten, ἐσπεύσθην πείθω, to persuade, ἐπείσθην θέτω, to put, ἐθέσθην ἀγοράζω, to buy, ἠγοράσθην

λ, μ, ν, ρ remain unchanged in the aorist except that in the case of λλ one is dropped. In verbs with monosyllabic stem, if ε immediately precedes the character it is changed to α (not to ει as in the active); in polysyllabic stems the ε remains unchanged; αι before ν is changed to α.

Ex. ἀγγέλλω, to announce, ἠγγέλθην στέλλω, to send, ἐστάλθην σύρω, to draw, ἐσύρθην ξηραίνω, to dry, ἐξηράνθην

Κλίνω, to incline, πλύνω, to wash, and κρίνω, to judge, drop the ν before the θ of the aorist; τείνω, to stretch, becomes ἐτάθην.

This completes the study of the regular verb, as far as it is necessary for a proper comprehension and use of Modern Greek. The student is earnestly advised to make himself thoroughly familiar with this section of the grammar, and to drill himself on the conjugation by means of the grammatical exercises.

A list of the irregular verbs, all the most important of which will have been learned by reason of their frequent recurrence in the reading and other exercises, will be given in the Appendix.

Φιλανθρωπία Λουδοβίκου ΙΣΤ'.

Λουδοβῖκος ὁ ΙΣΤ'., βασιλεὺς τῆς Γαλλίας, ἐσυνείθιζε κατὰ τὸ παράδειγμα τοῦ πάππου του Ἑρρίκου Δ'., νὰ ἀναμιγνύηται μετὰ τοῦ λαοῦ του, καὶ νὰ ἐπισκέπτηται τὴν κατοικίαν τοῦ πτωχοῦ καὶ τὴν καλύβην τοῦ χωρικοῦ. Ἐνῷ δέ ποτε ἐθήρευεν εἰς τὰ δάση τῆς Βερριέρας, ἀπήντησεν εἰς μοναξίαν νέον τινα, ὅστις μὴ γνωρίζων αὐτὸν ἔπεσε πρὸ τῶν ποδῶν αὐτοῦ λέγων· "Διὰ τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Θεοῦ δός με ἐλεημοσύνην, καὶ μὴ ἀμφιβάλλῃς ὅτι θὰ ὑπάγῃ εἰς καλὸν μέρος." "Καὶ δὲν ἠμπορεῖς καλλίτερα," τῷ εἶπεν ὁ βασιλεύς, "ἀντὶ νὰ ζητῇς ἐλεημοσύνην, νὰ ἐργάζησαι;" "Ναί, κύ-

Benevolence of Louis XVI.

Louis XVI., King of France, was accustomed, after the example of his grandfather, Henry IV., to mix with his people and to visit the home of the poor and the cabin of the peasant. While he was once hunting in the forests of Berry, he met in an unfrequented place a young man who, not knowing him, fell at his feet, saying: "For the name of God give me an alms, and do not doubt that it will go to a good purpose." "And canst thou not do better," said the King to him, "instead of begging an alms, to work?" "Yes, sir, but I am compelled to

"Ἀλήθειαν μὲ λέγεις;" "Ναί, κύριε, τὴν πᾶσαν ἀλήθειαν." Ὁ Λουδοβῖκος τῷ ἔδωκεν ἐλεημοσύνην τινα, πλὴν συλλογιζόμενος ὅτι μικρὸν αὕτη ἤθελε χρησιμεύσει ἂν ἦσαν ἀληθεῖς οἱ λόγοι του, τὸν ἠρώτησε πάλιν· "Καὶ εἶναι μακρὰν ἡ κατοικία σου;" "Ἕως τρία τεταρτημόρια λεύγης," ἀπεκρίθη ὁ νέος. Ὁ βασιλεὺς ἀπεφάσισε νὰ βεβαιωθῇ αὐτοπροσώπως περὶ τοῦ πράγματος καὶ ὁδηγούμενος ὑπὸ τοῦ νέου, δι' ἀκανθῶν καὶ τριβόλων, ἔφθασεν εἰς ἀχυροκαλύβην τινα πανταχόθεν ἄσκεπον, ἔνθα θρηνικαὶ φωναὶ ἀντήχησαν κατὰ πρῶτον εἰς τὰ ὦτά του· εἰσελθὼν δ' εἶτα εἶδε γέροντά τινα ἡμιθανῆ κείμενον ἐπὶ τῶν ἀχύρων, καὶ παιδία ἡμίγυμνα, τὰ μὲν ἀσθενῆ, τὰ δὲ ζητοῦντα ἄρτον παρὰ τῆς

Louis gave him an alms, but, reflecting that it would be of little service if his words were true, asked him again: "And is thy house far?" "Upwards of three-quarters of a league," replied the young man. The king resolved to assure himself in person of the matter, and, guided by the young man through the briars and thistles, arrived at a thatched hovel unprotected on all sides, where plaintive voices first sounded in his ears. Entering then, he saw the old man lying half dead on the straw, and half-naked children, some sick, others begging bread of their wretched mother, who besides tears had nothing else to give them.

Κινηθεὶς δ' εἰς οἶκτον ὁ Λουδοβῖκος διεμοίρασεν εἰς αὐτοὺς ἀμέσως ὅσα χρήματα εἶχε μεθ' ἑαυτοῦ, λυπούμενος μάλιστα ὅτι δὲν ἐκράτει πλειότερα. Ἐπιστρέψας δ' εἰς τὴν πόλιν διηγήθη τὸ συμβεβηκὸς τοῦτο εἰς τὴν οἰκογένειάν του καὶ προθύμῳ πάντων γνώμῃ ἐν τῷ ἅμα ἔπεμψεν αὐτοῖς ἰατρὸν καὶ πάντα τὰ ἀναγκαῖα.

Being moved to compassion, Louis distributed to them immediately whatever money he had with him, grieving exceedingly that he did not have more. Having returned to the city, he related this occurrence to his household, and, with the ready approval of all, immediately sent them a physician and everything necessary.

The Cardinal Numbers—τὰ ἀπόλυτα ἀριθμητικά

The cardinal and ordinal numbers in the following lessons should be learned by heart and repeated until they become perfectly familiar to the student. Read the first five numbers over aloud several times, then try to repeat them without looking at the book; when these can be recited and written without hesitation, go on to the next five, learn them and then repeat the ten, and so on up to twenty. Now learn the tens, five at a time, up to one hundred, and then the hundreds. Try to associate the Greek names in the mind, not with the English equivalents, but with the Arabic numerals. After the numbers have been learned so that counting is easy, write down several Arabic figures at random and say the Greek names for them, writing at the same time the Greek figures under the Arabic ones. These Greek figures are simply the letters of the alphabet in their regular order, those with a dash above the line and to the right representing numbers under 1000, while those with a dash below the line and to the left stand for numbers of 1000 or upward. The signs for 6, 90, and 900 are letters of the ancient (preclassical) alphabet; they are ϛ or στ′ (στίγμα, originally the digamma, δίγαμμα), 6, ϟ (κόππα), 90, and ϡ (σαμπί), 900. The Greek figures are less commonly used than the Arabic, nevertheless they occur sufficiently often in Greek books and newspapers to make it advisable to learn them.

The numbers in parentheses from 30 to 90 are the abbreviated forms of the vernacular, and are those most commonly heard in ordinary conversation.

The numbers 1, 6, 7, and 100, with their decimal multiples, take the rough breathing; all the others beginning with a vowel have the smooth breathing.

The numbers 1, 3, 4, all the hundreds from 200 upward, and 1000 are declined as adjectives. When unaccompanied by a noun, as in counting, ciphering, and to express the year, the neuter forms of these numerals are employed. The thousands are declined as nouns (χιλιάς, gen. χιλιάδος) and are properly followed by the genitive of the noun; in ordinary conversation, however, the nominative plural is usually employed.

The numbers 1, 3, and 4 are declined as follows:

	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc. and Fem.	Neut.	Masc. and Fem.	Neut.

$5 + 3 = 8$, πέντε καὶ τρία ὀκτώ.

$24 - 21 = 3$, εἴκοσι τέσσαρα πλὴν εἴκοσιν ἓν τρία.

$3 \times 6 = 18$, τρία ἐπὶ ἓξ δεκαοκτώ.

$18 \div 6 = 3$, δεκαοκτὼ διὰ ἓξ τρία.

$200 \div 4 = 50$, διακόσια διὰ τέσσαρα πενῆντα.

Grammatical Exercise

The repetition of the multiplication table is an excellent means of acquiring fluency in the use of the cardinal numbers; thus:

Δύο ἐπὶ ἓν δύο, δύο ἐπὶ δύο τέσσαρα, δύο ἐπὶ τρία ἕξ, δύο ἐπὶ τέσσαρα ὀκτώ, δύο ἐπὶ πέντε δέκα, δύο ἐπὶ ἓξ δώδεκα, δύο ἐπὶ ἑπτὰ δεκατέσσαρα, δύο ἐπὶ ὀκτὼ δεκαέξ, δύο ἐπὶ ἐννέα δεκαοκτώ, δύο ἐπὶ δέκα εἴκοσι, δύο ἐπὶ ἕνδεκα εἴκοσι δύο, δύο ἐπὶ δώδεκα εἴκοσι τέσσαρα.

Τρία ἐπὶ ἓν τρία, τρία ἐπὶ δύο ἕξ, τρία ἐπὶ τρία ἐννέα, κτλ.

Τέσσαρα ἐπὶ ἓν τέσσαρα, τέσσαρα ἐπὶ δύο ὀκτώ, κτλ.

Πέντε ἐπὶ ἓν πέντε, πέντε ἐπὶ δύο δέκα, πέντε ἐπὶ τρία δεκαπέντε, κτλ.

Work out other problems in mental arithmetic, in division, addition, and subtraction, after the formulæ above given. Set down a number of figures at random, or dates of well-known events, and translate them orally and in writing into Greek.

LESSON FIFTEENTH

ΜΑΘΗΜΑ ΔΕΚΑΤΟΝ ΠΕΜΠΤΟΝ

Thought Exercise

Ἀρχίζω τὴν μελέτην τοῦ ἑλληνικοῦ μου μαθήματος.
I begin the study of my Greek lesson.
Λαμβάνω τὸ βιβλίον ἐκ τῆς βιβλιοθήκης.
I take the book from the book-case.
Κάθημαι εἰς τὸ γραφεῖόν μου.
I sit down at my desk.
Ἀνοίγω τὸ βιβλίον.
I open the book.
Στρέφω εἰς τὸ δέκατον πέμπτον μάθημα εἰς τὴν ἑξηκοστὴν τρίτην σελίδα.
I turn to the fifteenth lesson at the sixty-third page.
Ἀρχίζω ν' ἀναγινώσκω.
I begin to read.
Ἀρχίζων μὲ τὴν πρώτην φράσιν κάμνω τὴν κίνησιν ἡ ὁποία ἐκφράζεται δι' αὐτῆς.
Beginning with the first phrase I make the movement which is expressed by it.
Ἐπαναλαμβάνω τὰς λέξεις καὶ τὴν ἀντιστοιχοῦσαν κίνησιν ἕως οὗ ἀμφότερα στενῶς συνδεθῶσιν ἐν τῇ διανοίᾳ μου.
I repeat the words and the corresponding movement until both are closely bound together in my mind.

Οὕτω θὰ μάθω νὰ ὁμιλῶ τὰ ἑλληνικὰ ὡς τὴν μητρικήν μου γλῶσσαν.

So I shall learn to speak Greek as my mother tongue.

Conversation Exercise

Before beginning this exercise the student will do well to learn the ordinal numbers as given in the grammatical section. In his answers to the questions he should vary the lesson and page numbers, remembering that μάθημα is neuter and σελίς (acc. σελίδα) is feminine.

Τί ἀρχίζετε τώρα; Ἐπιθυμεῖτε[1] ν' ἀρχίσητε τὴν μελέτην τῆς ἑλληνικῆς γλώσσης; Πότε[2] θὰ ἀρχίσητε τὴν μελέτην τοῦ ἑλληνικοῦ σας μαθήματος; Τί ἐλάβετε ἐκ τῆς βιβλιοθήκης; Πόθεν[3] ἐλάβετε τὸ βιβλίον τοῦτο; Λάβετε τὸ βιβλίον σας, παρακαλῶ, καὶ ἀρχίσατε τὴν μελέτην τοῦ μαθήματός σας. Ἀρχίζων τὴν μελέτην τοῦ ἑλληνικοῦ σας μαθήματος ποῦ κάθησθε; Καθήσατε εἰς τὸ γραφεῖόν σας, παρακαλῶ, καὶ ἀνοίξατε τὸ βιβλίον. Εἰς ποῖον μάθημα θὰ στρέψω; πρέπει νὰ στρέψητε εἰς τὸ πρῶτον μάθημα. Reading Exercise

Ξέρξης καὶ οἱ ψευδεῖς ἀδάμαντες.

Ξέρξης ὁ βασιλεὺς τῆς Περσίας, θέλων νὰ ἐκλέξῃ σύμβουλον εἰλικρινῆ καὶ ἱκανὸν, ἐπενόησε τὸ ἀκόλουθον τέχνασμα· ἑσπέραν τινα προσεκάλεσεν εἰς τὸ παλάτιόν του πέντε ἄνδρας τῆς πρωτευούσης, οἵτινες

Xerxes and the False Diamonds.

Xerxes, King of Persia, wishing to select an upright and able counsellor, devised the following plan: One evening he called to his palace five men of the capital who were regarded as ἐθεωροῦντο ὡς οἱ μᾶλλον ἔξυπνοι πάντων.

Ἀφοῦ δὲ ἦλθον, ὁ Ξέρξης δείξας εἰς αὐτοὺς τὴν ἀριστεράν του χεῖρα, εἰς τοὺς δακτύλους τῆς ὁποίας ἔλαμπον πέντε ἀδάμαντες θαυμασίου μεγέθους, εἶπε πρὸς αὐτούς·

"Σᾶς προσεκάλεσα ἐνταῦθα καὶ τοὺς πέντε, ἐλπίζων ὅτι θέλετε μοὶ εἴπει τὴν ἀλήθειαν. Βλέπετε τοὺς πέντε τούτους ἀδάμαντας, θέλουσι σᾶς δοθῆ ὡς ἀμοιβὴ τῆς εἰλικρινείας σας. Λέγετε, τί στοχάζεσθε περὶ τῆς δυνάμεως καὶ τῆς δόξης μου."

Καὶ οἱ μὲν τέσσαρες καταθαμβωθέντες ἐκ τοῦ μεγέθους καὶ τῆς ὡραιότητος τῶν ἀδαμάντων καὶ ἐκ τῆς ἰδέας, ὅτι ἠδύναντο ν' ἀποκτήσωσι κἀνένα ἐκ τούτων ἔσπευσαν ν' ἀποκριθῶσιν ἀλληλοδιαδόχως· ὅθεν καὶ ἐξύμνησαν ὁ εἷς περισσότερον τοῦ ἄλλου τὸ μεγαλεῖον τοῦ βασιλέως των, καὶ μετὰ τοσούτου ἐνθουσιασμοῦ ὡμίλησαν περὶ τῶν προτερημάτων καὶ τῶν ἀρετῶν του, καὶ τόσα λαμπρὰ the brightest (most wide-awake) of all.

After they had come, Xerxes, showing them his left hand, on the fingers of which glittered five diamonds of wonderful size, said to them:

"I have summoned you here, the five of you, hoping that you will tell me the truth. You see these five diamonds; they will be given to you as a reward of your sincerity. Say what you think of my power and glory."

Now four, dazzled by the size and beauty of the diamonds and by the thought that they might be able to obtain one of them, made haste to reply, each in turn, and then extolled, each more (extravagantly) than the other, the greatness of their king; with such rapture, indeed, they spoke of his prerogatives and virtues, and attributed to him such brilliant qualities, that it would be impossible for one to say more concerning the greatness and the omnipotence of God.

ἐπίθετα τῷ ἀπέδωκαν, ὥστε δὲν ἦτο δυνατὸν νὰ εἴπῃ τις περισσότερα περὶ τοῦ μεγαλείου καὶ τῆς παντοδυναμίας τοῦ Θεοῦ.

Ὁ βασιλεὺς ἐκβαλὼν ἀπὸ τοὺς δακτύλους του τέσσαρας ἐκ τῶν ἀδαμάντων ἐκείνων ἔδωκεν ἀνὰ ἕνα εἰς ἕκαστον τῶν ἀνδρῶν. Ἔπειτα στραφεὶς πρὸς τὸν πέμπτον λέγει·

The King, taking from his fingers four of those diamonds, gave one to each of the men. Then, turning to the fifth, he says:

"Καὶ σὺ διατί δὲν ὁμιλεῖς; Εἰπέ μοι καὶ σὺ τὴν γνώμην σου περὶ τῆς δυνάμεως καὶ τῆς δόξης μου."

"And thou, why dost thou not speak? Tell me, thou also, thy opinion concerning my power and my glory."

"Στοχάζομαι ἀπεκρίθη ἐκεῖνος, ὅτι ἡ δύναμίς σου εἶναι παρακαταθήκη, τὴν ὁποίαν ὁ Θεὸς ἐνεπιστεύθη εἰς σέ, διὰ τὴν εὐτυχίαν τῶν ὑπηκόων σου, καὶ περὶ τῆς ὁποίας θὰ σοῦ ζητήσῃ ἀκριβῆ λογαριασμὸν μίαν ἡμέραν· νομίζω ὅτι ἡ δόξα σου θὰ ἦναι ψευδὴς καὶ φθαρτὴ ἐὰν ζητῇς νὰ στηρίξῃς αὐτὴν εἰς τὴν ἐξωτερικὴν λαμπρότητα καὶ τὰς κατακτήσεις καὶ ὄχι εἰς τὴν αὐστηρὰν ἐκπλήρωσιν τῶν καθηκόντων σου."

"I believe," replied the latter, "that thy power is a charge which God has intrusted to thee for the happiness of thy subjects, and for which He will ask of thee an exact accounting one day; I think that thy glory will be false and perishable if thou seekest to establish it in external pomps and in conquests, and not in the austere fulfilment of thy duties."

Τότε ὁ βασιλεὺς ἀπεκρίθη· "Δὲν δίδω λοιπὸν εἰς σὲ τὸν ἄλλον ἀδάμαντα, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἐμπιστοσύνην καὶ τὴν φιλίαν μου. Μένε πάντοτε πλησίον μου· εὗρον τὸν ἄνθρωπον τὸν ὁποῖον ἡ καρδία μου ἐζήτει."

Τὴν ἐπαύριον ἦλθον οἱ ἄλλοι τέσσαρες εἰς τὸ παλάτιον μὲ πρόσωπα κατηφῆ, λέγοντες εἰς τὸν βασιλέα, ὅτι ὁ ἀδαμαντοπώλης τὸν ἠπάτησε, διότι τῷ ἐπώλησε ψευδεῖς ἀδάμαντας.

"Καὶ πῶς!" ἀπεκρίθη ὁ Ξέρξης γελῶν, "νομίζετε, ὅτι δὲν ἐγνώριζον τοῦτο; Μὲ ἐπηνέσατε ψευδῶς, σᾶς ἔδωκα καὶ ἐγὼ ψευδεῖς ἀδάμαντας· σᾶς ἐπλήρωσα μὲ τὸ ἴδιον νόμισμα· τί παραπονεῖσθε;"

Τοιουτοτρόπως ἠθέλησε νὰ διδάξῃ ὁ Ξέρξης τοὺς ἀνθρώπους ἐκείνους, ὅτι ἡ εἰλικρίνεια εἶναι τὸ καλλίτερον συστατικὸν εἰς τὸν ἄνθρωπον, ἐνῷ ἡ κολακεία εἶναι ἐλάττωμα κακὸν καὶ καθιστᾷ τὸν μεταχειριζόμενον τὴν κολακείαν ἀξιογέλαστον.

Then the King answered: "I do not then give thee the other diamond, but my confidence and friendship. Remain always near me; I have found the man whom my heart sought."

The next day the other four came to the palace with dejected looks, saying to the King that the diamond dealer had cheated him in that he had sold him false diamonds.

"Well, well!" replied Xerxes, laughing, "do you suppose that I did not know that? You praised me falsely and I gave you false diamonds; I paid you back with the same coin; of what do you complain?"

In this way Xerxes wished to teach these men that sincerity is the best recommendation to a man, while flattery is a wretched vice and renders the one employing the flattery ridiculous.

Grammar

The Ordinal Numbers—τὰ τακτικὰ ἀριθμητικά

These are formed from the cardinal numbers as follows:

1 πρῶτος	5 πέμπτος
2 δεύτερος	6 ἕκτος
3 τρίτος	7 ἕβδομος
4 τέταρτος	8 ὄγδοος

9	ἔννατος	90	ἐννενηκοστός
10	δέκατος	100	ἑκατοστός
11	ἑνδέκατος	101	ἑκατοστὸς πρῶτος
12	δωδέκατος	110	ἑκατοστὸς δέκατος
13	δέκατος τρίτος	200	διακοσιοστός
14	δέκατος τέταρτος	300	τριακοσιοστός
15	δέκατος πέμπτος	400	τετρακοσιοστός
16	δέκατος ἕκτος	500	πεντακοσιοστός
17	δέκατος ἕβδομος	600	ἑξακοσιοστός
18	δέκατος ὄγδοος	700	ἑπτακοσιοστός
19	δέκατος ἔννατος	800	ὀκτακοσιοστός
20	εἰκοστός	900	ἐννεακοσιοστός
21	εἰκοστὸς πρῶτος	1,000	χιλιοστός
25	εἰκοστὸς πέμπτος	2,000	δισχιλιοστός
30	τριακοστός	3,000	τρισχιλιοστός
40	τεσσαρακοστός	10,000	δεκάκις χιλιοστός
50	πεντηκοστός	50,000	πεντηκοντάκις χιλιοστός
60	ἑξηκοστός	100,000	ἑκατοντάκις χιλιοστός
70	ἑβδομηκοστός	1,000,000	ἑκατομμυριοστός
80	ὀγδοηκοστός	3,000,000	τρισεκατομμυριοστός

The ordinal numbers are regularly declined like adjectives of three terminations (see Lesson XXI.), masc. ος, fem. η, neut. ον. Thus: πρῶτος, πρώτη, πρῶτον · δεύτερος, δευτέρα, δεύτερον · τέταρτος, τετάρτη, τέταρτον · ὄγδοος, ὀγδόη, ὄγδοον. Note the change of accent in the feminine necessitated by the long vowel in the termination. This vowel is η in all except δεύτερος, in which it is α.

Fractions (κλασματικά) are represented, as in English, by a cardinal number for the numerator and an ordinal for the denominator, the latter (and also the former when it is one, three, or four, and therefore declinable) being in the neuter. Ex.: $\frac{1}{5}$, ἓν πέμπτον· $\frac{3}{10}$, τρία δέκατα· $\frac{4}{8}$, τέσσαρα ὄγδοα. One-half is ἥμισυς, ἡμίσεια, ἥμισυ, or, in the vernacular, μισός, μισή, μισόν. Half an hour, ἡμίσεια ὥρα, or μισὴ ὥρα—the half of an hour, τὸ ἥμισυ μιᾶς ὥρας.

The year is ordinarily expressed, as we saw in the preceding lesson, by the cardinal numbers in the neuter: in 1896, εἰς τὰ χίλια ὀκτακόσια ἐννενήκοντα ἕξ· but the ordinal numbers may also be employed: κατὰ τὸ χιλιοστὸν ὀκτακοσιοστὸν ἐννενηκοστὸν ἕκτον ἔτος· or the ordinal numbers may be used in the dative, agreeing with "in the year," thus: ἐν ἔτει χιλιοστῷ ὀκτακοσιοστῷ ἐννενηκοστῷ ἕκτῳ.

Numeral Adverbs—ἀριθμητικὰ ἐπιρρήματα

These are formed in general quite regularly by changing the termination of the cardinal number into άκις. The first four, however, and ἑκατοντάκις, are irregular.

ἅπαξ, once	δωδεκάκις, 12 times
δίς, twice	εἰκοσάκις, 20 times
τρίς, thrice	τριακοντάκις, 30 times
τετράκις, 4 times	ἑκατοντάκις, 100 times
πεντάκις, 5 times	χιλιάκις, 1000 times
δεκάκις, 10 times	μυριάκις, 10,000 times

The numeral adverbs may be used in multiplication, thus: τρὶς ἓξ εἶναι δεκαοκτώ, τετράκις πέντε εἶναι εἴκοσι, δεκάκις δέκα εἶναι ἑκατόν, κτλ.

Abstract Numbers—ἀριθμητικὰ οὐσιαστικά

The following are the most commonly employed; they are declined like feminine nouns of the third declension in ας, gen. αδος.

μονάς, unit, unity	τριάς, trinity	δωδεκάς, dozen
δυάς, couple	δεκάς, decade	εἰκοσάς, score

Multiplicatives—πολλαπλασιαστικά

These may be formed from the numeral adverbs by changing the termination άκις into απλοῦς, thus:

ἁπλοῦς, single, simple διπλοῦς, double, twofold τριπλοῦς, triple, threefold τετραπλοῦς, quadruple, fourfold πενταπλοῦς, fivefold δεκαπλοῦς, tenfold εἰκοσαπλοῦς, twentyfold ἑκατονταπλοῦς, one-hundred-fold

Proportional Numbers—σχετικὰ ἀριθμητικά

These are the same as the multiplicatives, the termination πλοῦς of the latter being changed to πλάσιος, thus: διπλάσιος, twice as many; τετραπλάσιος, four times as many; δεκαπλάσιος, ἑκατονταπλάσιος, κτλ.

The multiplicatives and proportionals are regularly declined like adjectives of three terminations. See p. 214.

Days of the Week

Four of the days of the week are called by the ordinal number (in the feminine agreeing with ἡμέρα, day, understood) indicating their sequence.

Sunday, Κυριακή—the Lord's day.
Monday, Δευτέρα—Second day.
Tuesday, Τρίτη—Third day.
Wednesday, Τετάρτη—Fourth day.
Thursday, Πέμπτη—Fifth day.
Friday, Παρασκευή—Parasceve, or day of preparation for the Sabbath.
Saturday, Σάββατον—the Sabbath.

Grammatical Exercise

Write down a number of fractions, using Arabic numerals, repeat them in Greek and then write them out. For example:

$\frac{1}{2}$ of 6 = 3, τὸ ἥμισυ τοῦ ἓξ εἶναι τρία.
$\frac{2}{5}$ of 20 = 8, τὰ δύω πέμπτα τοῦ εἴκοσιν εἶναι ὀκτώ.
$\frac{5}{6}$ of 30 = 25, τὰ πέντε ἕκτα τοῦ τριάκοντα εἶναι εἴκοσι πέντε.
$\frac{1}{4}$ of 50 = $12\frac{1}{2}$, τὸ τέταρτον τοῦ πεντήκοντα εἶναι δώδεκα καὶ ἥμισυ.

Say aloud and then write down the dates given in the preceding lesson, using the ordinal numbers, thus:

In 1492, κατὰ τὸ χιλιοστὸν τετρακοσιοστὸν ἐννενηκοστὸν δεύτερον ἔτος.

Repeat part of the multiplication table, using the numeral adverbs:

Τετράκις ἓν εἶναι τέσσαρα, τετράκις δύο εἶναι ὀκτώ, τετράκις τρία εἶναι δώδεκα, τετράκις τέσσαρα εἶναι δεκαέξ, τετράκις πέντε εἶναι εἴκοσιν.

Beginning and Ending of Letters

The forms used in the address and subscription of letters vary more or less according to the relative positions in the social scale of the writer and the person addressed. The name of the town and the date are placed as in English at the upper right-hand corner or at the lower left-hand corner; they are both in the dative case, or occasionally the date is in the accusative. The following are some of the more usual formulæ employed in the beginning and ending of letters:

Ἐν Βρουκλίνῃ, τῇ 4ῃ Μαρτίου, 1896.	Brooklyn, March 4, 1896.

In the forms for the beginning and ending of letters, here given, the date has been uniformly put in the dative case, the name of the town being preceded by ἐν. This is the more elegant way, but perhaps not the more usual. Very commonly the name of the town is written in the nominative and the date in the accusative, or the latter is marked simply by figures without any indication of case. Thus:

Βερολίνον, τὴν 18 Μαΐου, 1896 — or, Νέα Ὑόρκη, 4 Ἰουλίου, 1895.

Grammar

Nouns—τὰ οὐσιαστικά

There are three declensions of substantives in the literary language. The first declension comprises masculine nouns in ας or ης and feminine nouns in α or η. The nouns of the second declension end in ος for the masculine or feminine, and in ον for the neuter. These two declensions are parisyllabic (ἰσοσύλλαβα), i.e., there is the same number of syllables in all the cases. The third declension includes masculine, feminine, and neuter nouns of various terminations, which take an extra syllable in the genitive and other cases (imparisyllabic, περιττοσύλλαβα).

The dative case is seldom employed—almost never in ordinary conversation, except in certain adverbial expressions—its place being taken generally by εἰς or πρός with the accusative.

The accent in the different cases of the first declension remains throughout on the same syllable as in the nominative, whenever the quantity of the final syllable will permit. (It is to be noted that the αι of the nominative and vocative plural has the value of a short syllable as far as accent is concerned.) The only exception to this rule of accent is found in the genitive plural, which always has the circumflex on the final syllable. The reason given for this is that the termination ῶν is a contraction of άων. Substantives having an acute accent on the final syllable in the nominative (ποιητής, ψυχή) change this accent to circumflex in the genitive and dative of both numbers.

Nouns in ᾶς (which are few in number) are examples of the contracted declension, and preserve the circumflex accent in all the cases. They also take ᾶ instead of οῦ in genitive singular. A few other nouns (not contracted), chiefly proper names in ας, as Πυθαγόρας, also take α in the genitive.

The α of the vocative in words ending in ας is always long, but in most of the words ending in ης it is short.

Feminine nouns ending in α preceded by a vowel or ρ preserve the α throughout all the cases in the singular; those in which the nominative termination is preceded by a consonant (other than ρ) take η in the genitive and dative singular.

The feminine form of all adjectives of three terminations (see Lesson XXI.) is declined exactly like a feminine noun of the first declension.

LESSON SEVENTEENTH

ΜΑΘΗΜΑ ΔΕΚΑΤΟΝ ΕΒΔΟΜΟΝ

Thought Exercis

Ἔκαμα κηλίδα εἰς τὴν δευτέραν σελίδα τῆς ἐπιστολῆς μου.
I have made (a) blot on the second page of my letter.
Ξηραίνω τὴν μελάνην μὲ τὸν ἀπορροφητικὸν χάρτην (τὸ στυπόχαρτον).
I dry the ink with the blotting-paper.
Ξύω τὴν κηλίδα μὲ τὸ μαχαιρίδιόν μου.
I scratch out the blot with my penknife.
Τώρα ἐτελείωσα τὴν ἐπιστολήν.
Now I have finished the letter.
Ἡ ἐπιστολὴ φαίνεται ὀρθῶς ἔχουσα ἐκτὸς αὐτῆς τῆς μικρᾶς κηλίδος.
The letter appears to be correct except this little blot.
Λαμβάνω φάκελλον ἐκ τῆς χαρτοθήκης ἐκ τῶν δεξιῶν.
I take an envelope from the pigeon-hole on the right.
Διπλόνω τὴν ἐπιστολὴν καὶ θέτω αὐτὴν ἐντὸς φακέλλου.
I fold the letter and put it within the envelope.
Θέτω τὴν ἐπιγραφὴν εἰς τὸν φάκελλον.
I put the address on the envelope.
Σφραγίζω τὴν ἐπιστολήν.
I seal the letter.

Ζυγίζω τὴν ἐπιστολὴν διὰ νὰ ἴδω μὴ ἔχῃ ἀνάγκην διπλοῦ τέλους.

I weigh the letter in order to see lest it have need of double postage.

Ἡ ἐπιστολὴ ζυγίζει ἀκριβῶς ὀλίγον πλέον ἡμισείας ὀγγίας.

The letter weighs just a little more than half an ounce.

Προσκολλῶ ἓν γραμματόσημον.

I stick on one stamp.

Ἐπειδὴ εἶναι ἐπιστολὴ διὰ τὸ ἐξωτερικόν, πρέπει νὰ θέσω δύο γραμματόσημα.

Since it is a foreign letter (for the exterior), it is necessary to put on two stamps.

Τούτου ἕνεκα προσκολλῶ ἓν ἄλλο γραμματόσημον.

Therefore (on account of this) I put on another stamp.

Ἡ ἐπιστολὴ ζυγίζει ἀκριβῶς ὀλιγώτερον μιᾶς ὀγγίας.

The letter weighs just a little less than one ounce.

Ἐπειδὴ εἶναι ἐπιστολὴ διὰ τὸ ἐσωτερικόν, ἓν γραμματόσημον εἶναι ἀρκετόν.

Since it is a domestic (for the interior) letter, one stamp is sufficient.

Ὁ Δάμων καὶ ὁ Φιντίας.

Ὁ Δάμων καὶ ὁ Φιντίας, δύο Συρακούσιοι νέοι, ἀνατεθραμμένοι ἀμφότεροι κατὰ τὰς ἀρχὰς τῆς Πυθαγορικῆς σχολῆς ἦσαν συνηνωμένοι, διὰ δεσμῶν ἀκραιφνεστάτης φιλίας.

Damon and Phintias

Damon and Phintias, two young Syracusans, both brought up according to the principles of the Pythagorean school, were united by bonds of the most sincere friendship.

Διονύσιος ὁ τύραννος τῆς Σικελίας, ὑποπτευθεὶς τὸν Δάμωνα ὡς προδότην κατεδίκασεν αὐτὸν εἰς θάνατον. Βλέπων δὲ ὁ κατάδικος ὅτι οὐδεμία ὑπάρχει ἐλπὶς σωτηρίας, παρεκάλεσε τὸν τύραννον νὰ τῷ χαρίσῃ ὀλίγας τινὰς ἡμέρας μόνον, ἵνα διατάξῃ τὰ τοῦ οἴκου του, ὑποσχόμενος ὅτι ἐξάπαντος ἤθελεν ἐπιστρέψει ἵνα λάβῃ τὸν θάνατον.

Ὁ Διονύσιος τῷ ἔδωκε μὲν τὴν ἄδειαν ταύτην, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ συμφωνίᾳ ν' ἀφήσῃ ἄλλον ἀντ' αὐτοῦ, ὅστις νὰ λάβῃ τὸν θάνατον ἂν ἐκεῖνος δὲν ἐπέστρεφεν εἰς τὸ τέλος τῆς διορίας· οὐδ' ἐφαντάζετό ποτε ὁ τύραννος ὅτι ἠδύνατο νὰ εὑρεθῇ τις εἰς τοιαύτην περίστασιν νὰ παραδώσῃ ἑαυτὸν ἀντὶ ἄλλου. Ὁ Φιντίας ὅμως ἀκούσας τὸ πρᾶγμα ἄνευ δισταγμοῦ σπεύσας εὐθὺς παρέδωκεν ἑαυτὸν μετὰ πάσης τῆς ζητουμένης ἐγγυήσεως.

Ὀλίγοι ἐπῄνουν τὴν ἀφοσίωσιν ταύτην τοῦ φίλου,

Dionysius, the tyrant of Sicily, suspecting Damon to be a traitor, condemned him to death. But the condemned, seeing that no hope of deliverance remained, prayed the tyrant to grant him a few days only in order that he might set his family affairs in order, promising that he would absolutely return to suffer death.

Dionysius granted him permission, but only upon the condition that he should leave another in his place who would suffer death if he himself did not return at the expiration of the appointed time; the tyrant never imagined that any one could be found in such a case to give himself up instead of the other. But Phintias, hearing of the affair, hastening without delay, gave himself up immediately with all the required security.

A few praised this devotedness of the friend,

but most abused him exceedingly as foolish and light-minded, for the term was approaching, but the condemned did not appear; but they were greatly mistaken.

Ἐνῷ ὁ ἐν τῇ φυλακῇ ἐσύρετο εἰς τὸν τόπον τῆς καταδίκης, πάντῃ μὲν ἀτάραχος διὰ τὸν ἴδιον θάνατον λυπούμενος δὲ μόνον ὡς γινώσκων ἐντελέστατα, ὅτι ὁ φίλος του ἔμελλε νὰ ἐπιστρέψῃ ἀφεύκτως, αἴφνης τρέχει οὗτος, καὶ "Σταθῆτε, σταθῆτε!" ἀνέκραξε γεγονυῖᾳ τῇ φωνῇ, "αἱ ὑποθέσεις μου δὲν μοὶ ἐσυγχώρησαν νὰ ἔλθω προτήτερα, καὶ ἐβιάσθην μάλιστα νὰ μὴ δώσω τὸ ποθούμενον τέλος εἰς μερικὰς, φοβούμενος μὴ προφθάσητε καὶ θανατώσητε τὸν φίλον μου, ὅστις ἄλλο ἔγκλημα δὲν ἔπραξε παρ' ὅτι ἔδειξε τοιαύτην πρὸς ἐμὲ ἀφοσίωσιν· ὅθεν λύσατε αὐτὸν πλέον ἀπὸ τὰ δεσμὰ καὶ φέρατε ἐμὲ εἰς τὴν καταδίκην."

While the one in the prison was being dragged to the place of execution altogether unconcerned about his own death, but grieving only because he knew very well that his friend would inevitably return, suddenly the latter runs up, and "Stop, stop!" he shouted in a loud voice, "my affairs did not permit me to come sooner, and I was even forced not to give the desired termination to some of them, fearing lest you go ahead and kill my friend, who has committed no other crime than that he has shown such devotion to me; therefore loose him entirely from the bonds and lead me to the execution."

Πάντες ἐξεπλάγησαν ἐπὶ τῇ ἀπροσδοκήτῳ ταύτῃ πράξει, ὁ δὲ Διονύσιος οὕτω κατενύχθη, ὥστε ἀμέσως ἀπέλυσεν ἀμφοτέρους, λέγων ὅτι δὲν εὐχαριστεῖτο νὰ διαχωρίσῃ τοιούτους φίλους, ὧν αἱ καρδίαι ἦσαν οὕτω στενῶς συνδεδεμέναι μετ' ἀλλήλων, καὶ τοὺς παρεκάλεσε νὰ συμπεριλάβωσι καὶ αὐτὸν τρίτον εἰς τὴν φιλίαν των.

All were astonished at this unexpected act, but Dionysius was so touched that he immediately freed both, saying that he did not wish to separate such friends, whose hearts were so strongly bound to each other, and he begged them to include himself a third in their friendship.

The accent remains on the same syllable as in the nominative, as long as the quantity of the final syllable will permit, and there is no exception in the genitive plural, as in nouns of the first declension.

The terminations of the accusative and vocative of neuter nouns are the same as those of the nominative in both numbers. The vocative termination is the same as that of the nominative in all genders in the plural. The accusative singular termination is ον for all genders.

All adjectives of two terminations in ος and ον, as well as the masculine and neuter forms of adjectives and participles of three terminations in ος, η (α), ον (see Lesson XXI.), are declined like nouns of the second declension. The feminine of adjectives of three terminations, as was stated in the preceding lesson, is declined like a feminine noun of the first declension.

Diminutives

To the second declension belong the diminutives in ίον. These have often lost their original significance as diminutives, being employed, in the vernacular, in preference frequently to the more ancient form of the word; e.g., instead of ἡ βίβλος, the book (now always the Bible), we have τὸ βιβλίον· instead of ὁ χάρτης, paper, τὸ χαρτίον is usually employed. These diminutives are declined regularly in the literary language, but in the vernacular the final ον is usually dropped, and in the oblique cases the termination is united to the ι by synizesis (συνίζησις), the two syllables being pronounced as one, the ι assuming the force of the English y.

There is also a very large class of diminutives (chiefly used in the vernacular) formed by the substitution of άκιον, more commonly άκι, for the nominative termination. Thus, from τὸ δένδρον, the tree, we have τὸ δενδράκι(ον) · ὁ ἀδελφός, the brother, τὸ ἀδελφάκι(ον). These are declined in the same way as the other diminutives ending in ι(ον).

The dative case is never used in the vernacular, its place being taken by εἰς or πρός with the accusative, or sometimes by the genitive.

Contracted Nouns

There are a few words in this declension, especially among the adjectives, ending in εος or οος (εον or οον) which are contracted to οῦς or οῦν.

Voc.	(ὦ) νοῖ	πλοῖ	κατάρροι	(ὦ) ὀστᾶ

The simple (uncompound) words of this contracted class are all perispome, having the circumflex accent on the termination; but the compounds of νοῦς, πλοῦς, and ροῦς (stream) are paroxytone, i.e., with an acute accent on the penultimate or next to the last syllable. The genitive singular of νοῦς and its compounds is often written also νοός.

The post-box is at the next corner.

Θὰ λάβω τὴν ἐπιστολὴν καὶ θὰ τὴν ρίψω εἰς τὸ ταχυδρομικὸν κιβώτιον.

I will take the letter and will drop it in the letter-box.

Λαμβάνω τὸ ἐπανωφόριον καὶ τὸν πῖλόν μου.

I take my overcoat and hat.

Λαμβάνω τὴν ἐπιστολὴν καὶ ἐξέρχομαι τῆς οἰκίας.

I take the letter and go out of the house.

Προχωρῶ πρὸς τὴν γωνίαν.

I go towards the corner.

Φθάνω εἰς τὴν γωνίαν ὅπου εὑρίσκεται τὸ γραμματοκιβώτιον.

I reach the corner where the letter-box is.

Ἐγείρω τὸ κάλυμμα τοῦ γραμματοκιβωτίου καὶ ρίπτω τὴν ἐπιστολήν.

I raise the lid of the letter-box and drop in the letter.

'Επειδὴ ἡ ἐπιστολὴ διὰ τὸ ἐξωτερικὸν εἶναι ἀξίας θέλω τὴν δώσει ἐπὶ συστάσει.

As the foreign letter (for the exterior) is of value, I will give it for registration.

Προχωρῶ πρὸς τὸ ταχυδρομεῖον μὲ τὴν ἐπιστολήν.

I go to the post-office with the letter.

Τὸ ἀσφάλιστρον εἶναι ὀκτὼ ὀβολοί.

The registration fee is eight cents.

'Επιθέτω τὸ ἀναγκαῖον γραμματόσημον.

I put on the necessary stamp.

Δίδω τὴν ἐπιστολὴν εἰς τὸν ὑπάλληλον καὶ ζητῶ νὰ τὴν συστήσῃ.

I give the letter to the clerk and ask him to register it.

Θέτει ἐπὶ συστάσει τὴν ἐπιστολὴν καὶ μοὶ δίδει ἀπόδειξιν.

He registers the letter and gives me a receipt.

Τώρα ἡ ἐπιστολὴ θὰ ὑπάγῃ ἀσφαλῶς.

Now the letter will go safely.

youth, having summoned him, said to him that if he did not change his custom and did not follow exactly the rules of the school he must break off his studies and go away from there. This threat terrified the young man so that it finally induced him to confide the cause of this behavior of his. "In our family," he replied, "my parents and my brothers do not eat anything else but black bread, and hardly find even that. But I eat here white bread and excellent soup. The many kinds of food which I see before me on the table bring to my mind so vividly our home, that, even if I wish, I cannot eat of them. And how, indeed, can I take any comfort while I reflect that my dear parents are perishing of hunger?"

The principal was unable to keep back his tears, seeing such an instance of

"No," replied the young man, "but he sought it a long enough time, and when his means were exhausted he then withdrew to an island, preferring to live there wretchedly rather than to fall into debt in the capital." "If the thing is so," said the principal, "I will take care to obtain for him a pension of a thousand drachmas a year, and I will also see to it to send him the half in advance. In the meanwhile accept thyself now thirty drachmas for thy little outlays." "If, sir, you have the intention," said the young man, "to send money to my father, let these thirty drachmas also be added; I enjoy here whatever I desire, and there is not the least thing wanting to me, but I know how much

Grammar

Third Declension

The third declension comprises masculine, feminine, and neuter substantives ending in a, ι, υ, ω, ν, ρ, or σ (ψ, ξ). The nouns of this declension are imparisyllabic (περιττοσύλλαβα), that is, they have one syllable more in the genitive and following cases than in the nominative.

All nouns ending in a, ι, or υ are of the neuter gender.

The accent in all dissyllabic and polysyllabic words remains throughout on the same syllable as in the nominative as long as the quantity of the final syllable will permit. (The a and ι of the case-endings in the third declension are always short.) Monosyllabic nouns throw the accent on the termination in the genitive and dative in both numbers; in the other cases the accent remains on the stem. An exception to this rule occurs in the following six words, which are paroxytone, instead of perispome, in the genitive plural: ὁ παῖς, boy; ὁ σής, moth; ἡ δᾷς, torch; τὸ φῶς, light; τὸ οὖς, ear; and ὁ Τρώς, the Trojan.

The dative plural takes a ν (ν ἐφελκυστικόν) after the ι at the end of the sentence or when the following word begins with a vowel.

Τὸ ᾠὸν τοῦ Κολόμβου.

Ὁ Καρδινάλιος Μεντόζας ἔδωκέ ποτε συμπόσιον εἰς τιμὴν τοῦ Χριστοφόρου Κολόμβου, κατὰ τὸ ὁποῖον εἶπεν αὐτῷ τοὺς μεγίστους ἐπαίνους διὰ τὰς ἀνακαλύψεις, ἃς εἶχε κάμει. Ὠνόμαζε δὲ αὐτὰς μεγίστην τῶν νικῶν, ἃς ἀπέκτησέ ποτε τὸ ἀνθρώπινον πνεῦμα. Οἱ δὲ αὐλικοὶ φθονοῦντες ἠγανάκτησαν διὰ τοῦτο, καὶ εἷς ἐξ αὐτῶν εἶπε· "Μοὶ φαίνεται ὅτι ὁ δρόμος πρὸς τὸν λεγόμενον νέον κόσμον δὲν ἦτο τόσον δυσεύρετος· ὁ ὠκεανὸς ἦτο πανταχοῦ ἀνοικτός· ἑπομένως πᾶς θαλασσοπόρος Ἱσπανὸς ἤθελεν εὕρει τὸν δρόμον."

Ἡ ὁμήγυρις ἐπεδοκίμασε τὸν λόγον τοῦτον καὶ φωναί τινες ἠκούσθησαν· "Ὦ, βέβαια, βέβαια, ἕκαστος ἐξ ἡμῶν θὰ ἠδύνατο νὰ κάμῃ τοῦτο." "Πολὺ ἀπέχω," ἀπεκρίθη ὁ Χριστόφορος Columbus's Egg.

Cardinal Mendoza once gave a banquet in honor of Christopher Columbus at which he spoke the highest praises to him for the discoveries which he had made. He called them the greatest of the victories which the human mind ever achieved. But the courtiers, being envious, were indignant at that, and one of them said: "It seems to me that the way toward the so-called new world was not hard to find; the ocean was everywhere open, consequently every seafaring Spaniard might have found the way."

The company approved this speech, and certain voices were heard: "Why, of course! Every one of us could have done this!" "I am far," replied Columbus, "from boasting of Οὗτος δὲ λαβων τὸ ᾠὸν μάτην προσεπάθει νὰ τὸ ὀρθώσῃ· καὶ ὁ γείτων ὁμοίως ἀπεπειράθη, ἀλλὰ ἀπέτυχεν ὡσαύτως. Τότε ἄλλοι ἔσπευσαν πέριξ καὶ ἕκαστος προσεπάθει νὰ στήσῃ τὸ ᾠὸν διὰ νὰ λάβῃ τὸ βραβεῖον, ἀλλ' ἦτο ἀδύνατον νὰ ἐκτελέσῃ τις τὸ τέχνασμα. "Τοῦτο εἶναι ἀδύνατον," ἐκραύγασεν ἡ ὁμήγυρις, "ἀπαιτεῖτε πραγμα ἀκατόρθωτον." "Καὶ ὅμως τοῦτο εἶναι δυνατόν," εἶπεν ὁ Κολόμβος. And see here, for example," says Columbus to that gentleman, "stand this egg on end so that it does not fall." The other, taking the egg, tried in vain to set it upright; and his neighbor also attempted, but failed likewise. Then others hastened around, and each tried to stand up the egg in order to get the prize, but it was impossible for any one to accomplish the trick. "That is impossible!" cried the company, "you are asking something that cannot be done." "And yet this is possible," said Columbus.

Taking the egg and striking it lightly on the table, he stood it firmly on the pressed-in shell. "But that every one of us

Grammar

Contracted Nouns of the Third Declension

Several nouns of this declension, whose root ends in a vowel, suffer a contraction of this vowel with the termination in some or all of the oblique cases. These contractions occur in accordance with the following rule:

εα	becomes	η	—	εε	and	εϊ	become ει
υε	"	υ	—	εο	"	οο	" ου
οϊ	"	οι	—	οα	"	εω	" ω

SINGULAR

	Eyebrow	Mouse	City
Nom.	ἡ ὀφρύς	ὁ μῦς	τὸ ἄστυ
Gen.	τῆς ὀφρύος	τοῦ μυός	τοῦ ἄστεος
Dat.	τῇ ὀφρύϊ	τῷ μυΐ	τῷ ἄστει
Acc.	τὴν ὀφρύν	τὸν μῦν	τὸ ἄστυ
Voc.	(ὦ) ὀφρύ	(ὦ) μῦ	(ὦ) ἄστυ

PLURAL

Nom.	αἱ ὀφρῦς—ὀφρύες	οἱ μῦς—μῦες	τὰ ἄστη
Gen.	τῶν ὀφρύων	τῶν μυῶν	τῶν ἄστεων
Dat.	ταῖς ὀφρύσι(ν)	τοῖς μυσί(ν)	τοῖς ἄστεσι(ν)
Acc.	τὰς ὀφρῦς—ὀφρύας	τοὺς μῦς—μύας	τὰ ἄστη
Voc.	(ὦ) ὀφρῦς—ὀφρύες	(ὦ) μῦς—μῦες	(ὦ) ἄστη

The uncontracted forms of words of this class (genitive in ος) are also in use as well as the contracted ones. Like ἄστυ is declined τὸ ἥμισυ, the half. Note the irregular accent in the genitive plural of this word. Τὸ ἄστυ usually refers to Athens, and it is seldom employed in any other sense at the present day, ἡ πόλις being the ordinary word for city. The latter, when used alone, generally refers to Constantinople.

SINGULAR

	Forest	Echo	Dawn
Nom.	τὸ δάσος	ἡ ἠχώ	ἡ ἠώς
Gen.	τοῦ δάσους (δάσεος)	τῆς ἠχοῦς (ἠχόος)	τῆς ἠοῦς (ἠόος)
Dat.	τῷ δάσει (δάσεϊ)	τῇ ἠχοῖ (ἠχόϊ)	τῇ ἠοῖ (ἠόϊ)
Acc.	τὸ δάσος	τὴν ἠχώ (ἠχόα)	τὴν ἠώ (ἠόα)
Voc.	(ὦ) δάσος	(ὦ) ἠχοῖ	(ὦ) ἠοῖ

PLURAL

Nom.	τὰ δάση (δάσεα)	αἱ ἠχοί	αἱ ἠοί
Gen.	τῶν δασῶν (δασέων)	τῶν ἠχῶν	τῶν ἠῶν
Dat.	τοῖς δάσεσι(ν)	ταῖς ἠχοῖς	ταῖς ἠοῖς
Acc.	τὰ δάση (δάσεα)	τὰς ἠχούς	τὰς ἠούς
Voc.	(ὦ) δάση (δάσεα)	(ὦ) ἠχοί	(ὦ) ἠοί

The forms in parentheses are not employed, but are here given only to show how the contractions are effected. The nouns in ω and ως, which are few in number, are all feminine; they are declined in the plural like nouns of the second declension.

SINGULAR

	City	Forearm	King
Nom.	ἡ πόλις	ὁ πῆχυς	ὁ βασιλεύς
Gen.	τῆς πόλεως	τοῦ πήχεως	τοῦ βασιλέως
Dat.	τῇ πόλει (πόλεϊ)	τῷ πήχει (πήχεϊ)	τῷ βασιλεῖ(έϊ)
Acc.	τὴν πόλιν	τὸν πῆχυν	τὸν βασιλέα
Voc.	(ὦ) πόλι	(ὦ) πῆχυ	(ὦ) βασιλεῦ

PLURAL

Nom.	αἱ πόλεις	οἱ πήχεις	οἱ βασιλεῖς
Gen.	τῶν πόλεων	τῶν πήχεων	τῶν βασιλέων
Dat.	ταῖς πόλεσι(ν)	τοῖς πήχεσι(ν)	τοῖς βασιλεῦσι(ν)
Acc.	τὰς πόλεις	τοὺς πήχεις	τοὺς βασιλεῖς
Voc.	(ὦ) πόλεις	(ὦ) πήχεις	(ὦ) βασιλεῖς

In nouns of this class (genitive in εως) the ω of the genitive in both numbers has, as regards accent, the value of a short vowel, so that those words which are not accented on the final syllable in the nominative are proparoxytone in the genitive. All the words in ις, with few exceptions, are feminine. Like πῆχυς are declined ὁ πρέσβυς, ambassador, and ὁ πέλεκυς, hatchet. All the words in εύς are oxytone and masculine.

IRREGULAR NOUNS

The following are the most important of the irregular nouns of the third declension:

ὁ πατήρ, father, πατρός, πατρί, πατέρα, πάτερ—πατέρες, πατέρων, πατράσι(ν), πατέρας, πατέρες.

ἡ κλείς, key, κλειδός, κλειδί, κλεῖδα or κλεῖν, κλείς—κλεῖδες, κλειδῶν, κλεισί(ν), κλεῖδας or κλεῖς, κλεῖδες or κλεῖς.

ὁ ἀστήρ, star, ἀστέρος, has ἀστράσι(ν) in the dative plural.

ἡ χείρ, hand, χειρός, has χερσί(ν) in the dative plural.

ὁ Ἄρης, Mars, Ἄρεως or Ἄρεος, Ἄρει, Ἄρην or Ἄρη, Ἄρες.

ὁ Ζεύς, Jupiter, Διός, Διΐ, Δία, Ζεῦ.

ἡ Δημήτηρ, Ceres, Δήμητρος, Δήμητρι, Δήμητρα, Δήμητερ.

Γραῦς, ναῦς, and κλείς are very seldom employed in the modern language, the common forms being ἡ γραῖα, τὸ πλοῖον, and τὸ κλειδίον.

Vernacular Forms

In the language of the common people the third declension is not often used, many of the words of this class being changed to the first declension. Thus the masculine words ending in ην, ηρ, ων, ωρ, ας, της, ις (uncontracted), ξ, ψ, and ως (uncontracted) are changed to the first declension by taking the accusative plural as the nominative form: ὁ πατήρ, father, acc. plur. πατέρας. In the same way feminine words with these terminations take the accusative singular as the nominative: ἡ μήτηρ, mother, acc. sing. μητέρα.

LESSON TWENTIETH

ΜΑΘΗΜΑ ΕΙΚΟΣΤΟΝ

The student has now acquired a certain facility of mental expression of the common actions of daily life, and the so-called Thought Exercise will therefore give place to a new theme, which, while still serving as a basis for the Conversation Exercise, is designed to enlarge the learner's vocabulary. This is not intended to replace, but rather to supplement, the Thought Exercise, furnishing the student with fresh material which he should now be able to work into the latter, using the models already learned or constructing new ones from this and the Reading Exercises.

This theme should be read carefully (always aloud) several times, the translation being used only so far as it may be necessary to explain the new words, and when it is thoroughly familiarized, so that it can be read and understood without reference to the English, the Conversation Exercise may be taken up.

Ἡ εἰκών.

Πλουσιώτατός τις ἄνθρωπος ἀποθανὼν ἀφῆκε κληρονόμον τῆς περιουσίας του τὸν μονογενῆ υἱόν του, ὅστις ὑπελογίζετο ὅτι ἦτο εἰκοσιπενταετὴς περίπου· ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ εἶχεν ἀναχωρήσει πρὸ δώδεκα σχεδὸν ἐτῶν ἐκ τῆς πατρικῆς του οἰκίας, δὲν ἐγνώριζε κάνεὶς ποῦ εὑρίσκετο. Ὅθεν ἔστειλαν παντοῦ εἰς ἀναζήτησίν του· ἀλλ' αἱ ἔρευναι ἀπέβησαν μάταιαι καὶ διὰ πολὺν καιρὸν ἦτο ἄγνωστος ὁ διάδοχος.

The Portrait.

A very rich man, dying, left heir to his property his only son who was reckoned to be about twenty-five years old; but since he had left, nearly twelve years before, his father's house, no one knew where he was. Therefore they sent everywhere in search of him; but the search turned out fruitless, and for a long time the heir was unknown.

Τέλος πάντων ἰδοὺ παρουσιάζεται νέος τις μὲ Ἀσιατικὰ φορέματα καὶ διαβεβαιοῖ ὅτι αὐτὸς εἶναι ὁ κληρονόμος. Καὶ ἡ μὲν δικαστικὴ ἐξουσία ἦτο ἤδη ἑτοίμη νὰ τὸν ἀναγνωρίσῃ ὡς τοιοῦτον· ἀλλ' αἴφνης ἄλλος νέος ἐλθὼν ἐκ τῆς Ἀμερικῆς διαφιλονικεῖ τὴν κληρονομίαν· ἐνῷ δὲ οἱ δύο οὗτοι νέοι ἐφιλονίκουν, ἰδοὺ ἔρχεται καὶ τρίτος ἐκ τῆς Ῥωσσίας, καὶ παρουσιάζεται ὡς ἀληθὴς κληρονόμος.

Finally there presents himself a young man in Asiatic dress and declares that he is the heir. And, indeed, the judicial authority was already prepared to acknowledge him as such; but suddenly another youth coming from America lays claim to the inheritance; and while these two young men are disputing, behold there comes also a third from Russia and presents himself as the true heir.

Ὁ Δικαστὴς εὑρέθη ἀμηχανώτατος καὶ μὴ ἠξεύρων τί ν' ἀποφασίσῃ, κατέφυγεν εἰς τὸ ἀκόλουθον τέχνασμα· ἐκρέμασεν εἰς τὴν αἴθουσαν μίαν εἰκόνα πολὺ ὁμοιάζουσαν τὸν ἀποθανόντα καὶ στραφεὶς πρὸς τοὺς νέους εἶπε· "Δύο ἀπὸ σᾶς εἶσθε βεβαίως οἱ ἀπατεῶνες· ὁ Θεὸς θὰ προστατεύσῃ τὸν ἀθῶον καὶ θὰ δώσῃ τὴν κληρονομὶαν εἰς ἐκεῖνον ὅστις θὰ διαπεράσῃ διὰ τοῦ βέλους τούτου τὸ κομβίον τὸ εὑρισκόμενον ἐπὶ τοῦ

The judge found himself much embarrassed, and, not knowing what to decide, resorted to the following stratagem: He hung in the hall a portrait resembling greatly the dead man, and, turning to the young men, said: "Two of you are certainly impostors; God will protect the innocent and will give the inheritance to the one who will pierce with this arrow the button which is found στήθους τῆς εἰκόνος ταύτης."

Ὁ μὲν πρῶτος ἐπιτήδειος κυνηγὸς δὲν εἶχεν ἀμφιβολίαν περὶ τῆς ἐπιτυχίας· ἀλλ' ἐν τούτοις ἡ χεὶρ του τρέμει καὶ δὲν ἐπιτυγχάνει τὸ σημεῖον· ὁ δὲ δεύτερος ἐπλησίασε περισσότερον· ὁ τρίτος ὅμως ἀφοῦ ἐτέντωσε τὸ τόξον του τὸ συνέτριψε κατὰ γῆς, κράζων ὅτι ἐπροτίμα νὰ χάσῃ τὴν κληρονομίαν παρὰ νὰ διατρυπήσῃ τὸ στῆθος τοῦ πατρός του ἔστω καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς εἰκόνος.

upon the breast of this portrait."

The first, an expert hunter, had no doubt of his success; but just then his hand trembles and he does not reach the mark. The second came nearer. But the third, after he had stretched his bow, broke it to pieces on the ground, crying out that he preferred to lose the inheritance rather than to pierce the breast of his father, even though only in a picture.

Ὁ δικαστὴς πεισθεὶς ὅτι αὐτὸς ἦτο ὁ ἀληθὴς υἱὸς τὸν ἐνηγκαλίσθη φιλοστόργως, καὶ μὲ δάκρυα εἰς τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς τῷ ἀπέδωκεν ὅλα τὰ ἀγαθὰ καὶ τοὺς τίτλους τοῦ πατρός του.

The judge, persuaded that this was the real son, embraced him affectionately, and with tears in his eyes gave over to him all the goods and the titles of his father.

Grammar

Names of Persons

The first names of women end in α or η, and are declined like nouns of the first declension, except that they preserve the α or η throughout whether the stem ends in a consonant or in a vowel.

The first names of men end in ας, ης, ος, εύς, or ων. Those terminating in ας and some of those ending in ης follow the first declension, but preserve the α or η in the genitive, instead of taking the termination ου. The names ending in ος follow the second declension; those in εύς, ων, and most of those in ης (namely those in -γένης, -κράτης, -λάμπης, -μήδης, -πήθης, -σθένης, -τέλης, -φάνης, -χάρης, and -κλῆς) are of the third declension.

	Nominative
ὁ Πυθαγόρας	Διογένης	Ἀρχιμήδης	Περικλῆς Genitive
τοῦ Πυθαγόρα	Διογένους	Ἀρχιμήδους	Περικλέους
	Dative
τῷ Πυθαγόρᾳ	Διογένει	Ἀρχιμήδει	Περικλεῖ Accusative
τὸν Πυθαγόραν	Διογένη(ην)	Ἀρχιμήδη(ην)	Περικλῆ(έα)
	Vocative
(ὦ) Πυθαγόρα	Διόγενες	Ἀρχιμῆδες	Περίκλεις

Note the accent in the vocative of nouns ending in ης · that of Ἀρχιμήδης is irregular.

Patronymics terminate in ας, ης, or ος. Those ending in ας or ης are declined as nouns of the first declension, but retain the α, or η throughout; those in ος follow the second declension.

When preceded by Κυρία (Mrs.), the patronymic is placed in the genitive: ἡ Κυρία Παπαδοπούλου, Mrs. P. (the lady of Παπαδόπουλος).

Fourth Declension

This contains only nouns employed in the vernacular, and is not found in the literary form of the language. It is parisyllabic in the singular and imparisyllabic in the plural. As the vernacular never employs the dative, there are but four cases in this declension.

Singular

	Coachman	Baby	Count
Nom.	ὁ ἀμαξᾶς	μπεμπές[1]	κόντες
Gen.	τοῦ ἀμαξᾶ	μπεμπέ	κόντε
Acc.	τὸ(ν) ἀμαξᾶ(ν)	μπεμπέ(ν)	κόντε(ν)
Voc.	(ὦ) ἀμαξᾶ	μπεμπέ	κόντε

Plural

Nom.	οἱ ἀμαξάδες	μπεμπέδες	κόντηδες
Gen.	τῶ(ν) ἀμαξάδω(ν)	μπεμπέδω(ν)	κόντηδω(ν)[2]
Acc.	τοὺς ἀμαξάδες	μπεμπέδες	κόντηδες
Voc.	(ὦ) ἀμαξάδες	μπεμπέδες	κόντηδες

SINGULAR

	Shoemaker	Stupid Woman
Nom.	ὁ παπουτσῆς	ἡ μπουνταλοῦ[1]
Gen.	τοῦ παπουτσῆ	τῆς μπουνταλοῦς
Acc.	τὸ(ν) παπουτσῆ(ν)	τὴ(ν) μπουνταλοῦ(ν)
Voc.	(ὦ) παπουτσῆ	(ὦ) μπουνταλοῦ

PLURAL

Nom.	οἱ παπουτσῆδες	ᾑ μπουνταλοῦδες
Gen.	τῶ(ν) παπουτσήδω(ν)	τῶ(ν) μπουνταλούδω(ν)
Acc.	τοὺς παπουτσῆδες	ταὶς μπουνταλοῦδες
Voc.	(ὦ) παπουτσῆδες	(ὦ) μπουνταλοῦδες

The ν of the accusative singular and genitive plural is pronounced only when the following word begins with a vowel.

The definite article in the vernacular is declined as follows:

	SINGULAR				PLURAL
Nom.	ὁ	ἡ	τό	Nom.	οἱ	ᾑ	τά
Gen.	τοῦ	τῆς	τοῦ	Gen.	τῶ(ν)	τῶ(ν)	τῶ(ν)

[1] Pronounced boodaloó.

Grammar

Adjectives—ἐπίθετα

Adjectives are usually of three terminations, masculine, feminine, and neuter; there are many, however, of two terminations, one common to the masculine and feminine and the other to the neuter; a few have but one termination for masculine and feminine with no neuter.

I. Adjectives of Three Terminations, τριακατάληκτα ἐπίθετα.—These end in

1. ος, α or η, ον. When the stem ends with a vowel or ρ, the feminine is formed with α· when the stem ends with a consonant, except ρ, the feminine termination is η. An exception to this rule is ὄγδοος, ὀγδόη, ὄγδοον, eighth. The α of the feminine termination of adjectives in ος is long; in those of other terminations it is short.

καλός, καλή, καλόν· καλοί, καλαί, καλά, good.
ἄξιος, ἀξία, ἄξιον· ἄξιοι, ἄξιαι, ἄξια, worthy.
καθαρός, καθαρά, καθαρόν· καθαροί, καθαραί, καθαρά, pure.

2. οῦς, ᾶ or ῆ, οῦν. The formation of the feminine in this contracted declension follows the same rule concerning α and η as the preceding uncontracted declension.

χρυσοῦς, χρυσῆ, χρυσοῦν· χρυσοῖ, χρυσαῖ, χρυσᾶ, golden.
ἀργυροῦς, ἀργυρᾶ, ἀργυροῦν· ἀργυροῖ, ἀργυραῖ, ἀργυρᾶ, silver.

3. ύς, εῖα, ύ. Words of this class are all oxytone in the nominative singular (masculine and neuter) except ἥμισυς, ἡμίσεια, ἥμισυ, half.

ταχύς, ταχεῖα, ταχύ· ταχεῖς, ταχεῖαι, ταχέα, rapid.

4. ίεις, ίεσσα, ίεν· όεις, όεσσα, όεν.

χαρίεις, χαρίεσσα, χαρίεν· χαρίεντες, χαρίεσσαι, χαρίεντα, graceful.

πτερόεις, πτερόεσσα, πτερόεν · πτερόεντες, πτερόεσσαι, πτερόεντα, winged.

5. Participles (μετοχαί). These are:

a. Present and perfect passive in ος, η, ον. They are declined like the adjectives of the same terminations (see 1).

b. Present and second aorist active in ων, ουσα, ον.

λέγων, λέγουσα, λέγον · λέγοντες, λέγουσαι, λέγοντα, saying.

εἰπών, εἰποῦσα, εἰπόν · εἰπόντες, εἰποῦσαι, εἰπόντα, having said.

Like these participles are declined the adjectives ἑκών, ἑκοῦσα, ἑκόν, voluntary, and ἄκων, ἄκουσα, ἄκον, involuntary.

c. First aorist active in ας, ασα, αν.

λύσας, λύσασα, λύσαν · λύσαντες, λύσασαι, λύσαντα, having loosened.

Similarly is declined πᾶς, πᾶσα, πᾶν, all, every.

d. Aorist passive in εἰς, εἶσα, ἐν.

λυθείς, λυθεῖσα, λυθέν · λυθέντες, λυθεῖσαι, λυθέντα, loosened.

e. Perfect participles in ώς, υῖα, ός.

κεκμηκώς, -κυῖα, -κός · -κότες, -κυῖαι, -κότα, tired.

πεποιθώς, -θυῖα, -θός · -θότες, -θυῖαι, -θότα, persuaded.

As will be seen from the above examples, the feminine of all adjectives of three terminations follows in its declension that of nouns of the first declension; the masculine and neuter forms in ος, ον, and οῦς, οῦν, follow the second declension, the others the third.

The ordinal numbers are declined regularly like adjectives of three terminations. The feminine of ὄγδοος, however, terminates irregularly in η instead of in α (see 1).

The following are irregular in their declension:

II. Adjectives of Two Terminations, δικατάληκτα ἐπίθετα.—These end in

1. ης, ες. The adjectives of this class are declined like contracted nouns of the third declension; thus:

2. ος, ον. To this class belong most adjectives compounded of two words, as, ἀ-θάνατος, immortal; ἄ-πειρος, inexperienced; ἐξ-αίρετος, excellent; διά-φορος, different; and a few other uncompounded adjectives, such as βάρβαρος, barbarous; ἥσυχος, quiet; ὠφέλιμος, useful; ἀκόλουθος, following. They follow regularly the second declension.

3. ους, ουν. Those ending in πους are declined like the noun ὁ πούς (p. 192), the others like contracted nouns of the second declension (p. 169); those in νους may, however, remain uncontracted in the plural, especially in the neuter plural; those in χρους may have χρώματος in the genitive and χρώματα in the accusative singular.

4. ων, ον. These follow the third declension.

εὐδαίμων, εὔδαιμον · εὐδαίμονες, εὐδαίμονα, happy.

5. Miscellaneous terminations:

ἄδακρυς, ἄδακρυ · ἀδάκρυες, ἀδάκρυα, cruel (tearless).

εὔελπις, εὔελπι · εὐέλπιδες, εὐέλπιδα, hopeful.
εὔχαρις, εὔχαρι · εὐχάριτες, εὐχάριτα, pleasant.

III. Adjectives of One Termination, μονοκατάληκτα ἐπίθετα.—These are few in number. They all belong to the third declension.

ἄπαις, ἄπαιδες, childless.
βλάξ, βλάκες, stupid.
εἴρων, εἴρωνες, ironical.
μύωψ, μύωπες, near-sighted.

Lady Nithsdale, supported by two of her maids and like a woman who had lost hope, went into the Tower. After she had entered the prison she constrained her husband, who was of her height, to change his clothes and to go out in the same manner with which she had come in, and added that her carriage would take him to the bank of the Thames, where he would find a boat which would put him on a ship ready to depart for France. The stratagem was executed successfully; Lord Nithsdale made his escape (became invisible), arriving at three

The following morning they sent a messenger to bring the prisoner to the place of execution; the messenger was greatly astonished when he found a woman instead of a man.

The news quickly spread abroad, and the Governor of the Tower sought advice of the court what should be done with Lady Nithsdale; he received an order to set her free, and she went off to meet her beloved husband.

Grammar

Comparison of Adjectives

The comparative (τὸ συγκριτικόν) and the superlative (τὸ ὑπερθετικόν) are formed by the terminations τερος, τέρα, τερον, and τατος, τάτη, τατον respectively. These terminations are added to the positive neuter form of the adjective as follows:

1. Those in ος, α or η, ον, drop the final ν of the neuter, thus:

μικρός, -ά, -όν, small, μικρότερος, μικρότατος.

When the final vowel of the stem is short by nature or by position, i.e., not followed by two consonants or a double consonant (ζ, ξ, ψ), the ο is lengthened to ω, thus:

πλούσιος, -η, -ον, rich, πλουσιώτερος, πλουσιώτατος.
εὔκολος, -η, -ον, easy, εὐκολώτερος, εὐκολώτατος.

2. The contracted form in οῦς, οῦν, changes the final ν to σ, thus:

ἁπλοῦς, -οῦν, simple, ἁπλούστερος, ἁπλούστατος.

3. In words ending in υς, ης, or ας, the terminations are added to the unchanged neuter form, thus:

γλυκύς, γλυκύ, sweet, γλυκύτερος, γλυκύτατος.
ἀληθής, ἀληθές, true, ἀληθέστερος, ἀληθέστατος.
μέλας, μέλαν, black, μελάντερος, μελάντατος.

4. Adjectives in ις add the termination to the neuter form after changing the final ν to σ, thus:

χαρίεις, χαρίεν, graceful, χαριέστερος, χαριέστατος.

5. Those in ων interpose εσ between the termination of the neuter and the comparative or superlative ending, thus:

εὐδαίμων, εὔδαιμον, happy, εὐδαιμονέστερος, εὐδαιμονέστατος.

The comparative may also be formed by prefixing μᾶλλον, πλέον, or περισσότερον, more, and the superlative by prefixing τὰ μάλιστα, most, to the positive, thus:

ἄσχημος, ugly, ἀσχημότερος or μᾶλλον ἄσχημος, ἀσχημότατος or τὰ μάλιστα ἄσχημος.

πεπαιδευμένος, cultivated, μᾶλλον πεπαιδευμένος, τὰ μάλιστα πεπαιδευμένος.

This form is always used in the comparison of participles employed in the sense of adjectives, and usually also in that of adjectives of one termination and of those of two terminations in υς, ις, ωρ, and ην (see 5, p. 218).

The superlative is sometimes formed, especially in the vernacular, by prefixing the article to the comparative, thus:

ὡραῖος, beautiful, ὡραιότερος, ὡραιότατος or ὁ ὡραιότερος.

ἄσχημος, ugly, ἀσχημότερος, ἀσχημότατος or ὁ ἀσχημότερος.

The comparison of the following is irregular:

[1] These are archaic forms, seldom seen except in poetry. [2] Very commonly used instead of the regular comparison on p. 227.

The following are the comparative and superlative forms derived from certain adverbs and prepositions:

ἄνω, above,	ἀνώτερος, higher,	ἀνώτατος, highest

ὑπέρ, above,	ὑπέρτερος, superior,	ὑπέρτατος, supreme ὕπατος
ὕστερον, after,	ὕστερος, posterior,	ὕστατος, last, final

The lower degrees of comparison are expressed by ὀλιγώτερον, ἔλασσον, or ἧττον, less, and ὀλίγιστα, ἐλάχιστα, or ἥκιστα, least, with the positive form of the adjective. The superlative is also used to denote a quality in a high degree (very) without any idea of comparison.

Than, after a comparative, is expressed by ἤ or (in the vernacular) παρά with the nominative, by ἀπό with the accusative (in the vernacular), or simply by the genitive. The superlative is followed by the genitive.

Ἀλέξανδρος ὁ μέγας καὶ ὁ ἀφρικανὸς ἀρχηγός.

Ὁ μέγας Ἀλέξανδρος κατὰ τὴν ἐκδρομήν του εἰς Ἀφρικὴν εὗρεν εἰς ἄγνωστον γωνίαν γῆς ἀφανῆ λαόν, ζῶντα ἥσυχον εἰς τὰς ταπεινάς του καλύβας. Τὸν ὡδήγησαν εἰς τὸν ἀρχηγόν, ὅστις τὸν προσεκάλεσεν εἰς τὴν τράπεζάν του καὶ τῷ προσέφερε τεμάχια χρυσίου, παριστῶντα φοίνικας, ἄλλους καρποὺς καὶ ἄρτους. Ὁ Μακεδὼν μονάρχης, θεωρῶν τὰ πλαστὰ ταῦτα φαγητά, ἀνέκραξε· Μήπως τρώγετε ἐνταῦθα χρυσίον;

Οὐχί, ἀπεκρίθη ὁ ἄγριος· ἀλλ' ἐστοχάσθην, ὅτι ἐὰν

Alexander the Great and the African Chief.

Alexander the Great, during his sally into Africa, found in an unknown corner of earth an obscure people living quietly in its humble cabins. They conducted him to the chief, who invited him to his table and offered him pieces of gold representing dates and other, and loaves of bread. The Macedonian monarch, seeing this imitation food, cried: "You do not eat gold here, do you?"

"No," replied the savage, "but I thought that δὲν ἐστερεῖσθε ἀξιολόγου τροφῆς εἰς τὴν πατρίδα σας δὲν ἠθέλετε ζητήσει τοιαύτην ἐδῶ. Τί λοιπὸν ζητεῖτε παρ' ἡμῶν;

Βεβαίως οὐχὶ τὸν χρυσόν σας, ἀλλὰ νὰ γνωρίσωμεν τὰ ἤθη καὶ ἔθιμα ὑμῶν.

Λοιπὸν περιμείνατε ὀλίγον καὶ θέλετε τὰ γνωρίσει.

Ἐνῷ ὁ Ἀφρικανὸς ἀρχηγὸς ἔλεγε τοὺς λόγους τούτους, δύο ἄνθρωποι προσελθόντες τὸν παρεκάλεσαν νὰ τοὺς δικάσῃ περὶ μιᾶς διαφορᾶς ἐγερθείσης μεταξύ των. Ὁ εἷς εἶπεν: Ὁ γείτων μου οὗτος μοὶ ἐπώλησεν ἀγρὸν ἐντὸς τοῦ ὁποίου εὑρέθη θησαυρός. Θέλω νὰ τῷ τὸν ἀποδώσω ὡς ἀνήκοντα εἰς αὐτόν, διότι ἠγόρασα μόνον τὸν ἀγρόν, ἀλλ' αὐτὸς τὸν ἀποποιεῖται.

Ὁ ἕτερος ἀπεκρίθη. Ἡ ἀποποίησίς μου εἶναι τοσοῦτον εὐσυνείδητος, ὅσον καὶ ἡ γενομένη εἰς ἐμὲ προσφορά. Παρεχώρησα τὴν ἰδιοκτησίαν μου μεθ' ὅλων τῶν ἐν αὐτῇ περιεχομένων, if you were not deprived of remarkable food in your own country you would not seek such here. What do you seek of us?"

"Certainly not your gold, but to know your manners and customs."

"Then wait a little and you will know them."

While the African chief was saying these words, two men, coming to him, asked him to decide concerning a difference that had arisen between them. One said: "This neighbor of mine sold me a field in which a treasure was found. I wish to return it to him as belonging to him, for I bought only the field, but he refuses it."

The other replied: "My refusal is as conscientious as the offer which was made to me. I gave over my property with all there was in it, consequently I have no right to the treasure which is included in the sale."

Ὁ δικαστὴς ἐπανέλαβε τοὺς λόγους τῶν δύο διαδίκων, διὰ νὰ βεβαιωθῇ ὁ ἴδιος ὅτι τοὺς ἐννόησε καλῶς. Ἔπειτα σκεφθεὶς ὀλίγον, εἶπεν εἰς τὸν πρῶτον· ἔχεις θυγατέρα; Μάλιστα. Καὶ σύ, ἠρώτησε τὸν ἄλλον, ἔχεις υἱόν; Μάλιστα. Τὰ τέκνα γνωρίζονται μεταξύ των, ἀγαπῶνται ἀμοιβαίως; Ὦ πολύ, ἀνέκραξαν ταὐτοχρόνως.

The judge repeated the words of the two contestants in order to assure himself that he understood them well. Then, reflecting a little, he said to the first: "Hast thou a daughter?" "Yes." "And thou," he asked the other, "hast thou a son?" "Yes." "The children are acquainted with each other; they love each other?" "Oh, much," they exclaimed simultaneously.

Τότε, φίλοι μου, πρέπει νὰ τὰ ὑπανδρεύσητε καὶ νὰ τοῖς δώσητε τὸν θησαυρόν.

"Then, my friends, you must marry them and give them the treasure."

Ὁ Ἀλέξανδρος ἵστατο ἐκπεπληγμένος ἐκ τῆς κρίσεως ταύτης. Μήπως τὴν εὑρίσκετε ἄδικον; εἶπεν ὁ Ἀφρικανὸς ἀρχηγός. Οὐχί, βεβαίως, ἀλλ' ὑπάρχει κἄτι παράδοξον εἰς τὸ πρᾶγμα.

Alexander stood astonished at this decision. "You did not find it unjust?" said the African chief. "No, certainly not, but there is something strange in the matter."

Αἴ! καὶ πῶς ἡ ὑπόθεσις αὕτη ἤθελε τελειώσει εἰς τὸ βασίλειόν σας; Νὰ σὲ

"Indeed! and how would this question be decided in your kingdom?"

εἴπω τὴν ἀλήθειαν, ὁ θησαυρὸς ἤθελεν ἀφαιρεθῇ ἀπὸ τοὺς διαδίκους καὶ δοθῇ εἰς τὴν κυβέρνησιν ὡς ἰδιοκτησία της. Εἰς τὴν κυβέρνησιν; ἀλλ' ἡ γῆ σας φωτίζεται ὑπὸ τοῦ ἡλίου; Ἀναμφιβόλως. Βρέχει ὁ οὐρανός; Βεβαίως. Παράδοξον! κατοικεῖται ὑπὸ ἡμέρων καὶ ἀγρίων ζῴων; Ὑπὸ ζῴων παντὸς εἴδους.

"To tell you the truth, the treasure would be taken away from the contestants and given to the government as its property." "To the government? But your land is lighted by the sun?" "Undoubtedly." "It rains?" "Certainly." "Strange! It is inhabited by domestic and wild animals?" "By animals of every kind."

Τότε λοιπὸν πρὸς χάριν τῶν ἀθώων τούτων ζῴων ὁ Θεὸς ἀνατέλλει τὸν ἥλιόν του καὶ ποτίζει τὴν γῆν του διὰ τῆς βροχῆς· διότι, σεῖς, τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, δὲν εἶσθε ἄξιοι τοιαύτης εὐεργεσίας.

"Then for the sake of these innocent animals God causes his sun to rise and waters his earth with the rain; for you, in truth, are not worthy of such beneficence."

Grammar

Adverbs—Ἐπιρρήματα

Most adverbs are derived from adjectives, nouns, or other parts of speech, but some are original and independent of other words in their formation.

Those derived from adjectives are formed by changing the termination ων of the genitive plural masculine into ως, thus:

Adjective	Gen. Plural	Adverb
καλός, good	καλῶν	καλῶς
βέβαιος, certain,	βεβαίων	βεβαίως
ἁπλοῦς, simple,	ἁπλῶν	ἁπλῶς
μέγας, great,	μεγάλων	μεγάλως
βαρύς, heavy.	βαρέων	βαρέως

The comparison of adverbs of this class follows that of the corresponding adjectives, the comparative being the neuter singular (sometimes plural) of the comparative of the adjective, the superlative the neuter plural of the superlative form of the adjective, thus:

καλῶς	κάλλιον, καλλίτερον	κάλλιστα, ἄριστα
βεβαίως	βεβαιότερον	βεβαιότατα
ἁπλῶς	ἁπλούστερον	ἁπλούστατα
μεγάλως	μεῖζον, μεγαλείτερον	μέγιστα
βαρέως	βαρύτερον	βαρύτατα

The comparison is sometimes indicated, as in the case of adjectives, by πλέον, περισσότερον, or μᾶλλον.

Sometimes, especially in the vernacular, one of the case-endings, more often the neuter singular or plural, of the adjective is employed as an adverb, thus: ἀριστερά, or ἀριστερᾷ, to the left; δεξιά, or δεξιᾷ, to the right; δημοσίᾳ, publicly; δυνατά, strongly; ἰδίᾳ, privately; μακράν (ὁδόν, understood), far; μόνον, only; πεζῇ, on foot; πολύ, much.

Adverbs of nationality may end in κά or ιστί, thus: ἑλληνικά or ἑλληνιστί, γαλλικά or γαλλιστί, ἀγγλικά or ἀγγλιστί.

The numeral adverbs have been given on p. 146.

Adverbs denoting rest in a place have the termination θι or σι—ἄλλοθι, elsewhere; οὐρανόθι, in heaven; θύρασι, by the door; Ἀθήνησι, in Athens; those denoting motion toward a place, σε or δε—οἴκαδε, towards home; ἄλλοσε, to another place, elsewhither; those denoting motion from a place, θεν—ἄλλοθεν, from another place, elsewhere; οὐρανόθεν, from heaven; ἄνωθεν, from above.

The other adverbs of time, place, manner, etc., have no peculiarities that require explanation here. Those in common use have already been encountered frequently in the preceding exercises.

Οἱ ὀλυμπιακοὶ ἀγῶνες.

Μέχρι τῆς ὀλυμπιάδος ταύτης εἷς καὶ μόνος ἐτελεῖτο ἀγών, τὸ ἁπλοῦν στάδιον, τότε δὲ κατὰ πρῶτον εἰσήχθη καὶ δεύτερος ἀγών, τὸ διπλοῦν στάδιον, ὁ λεγόμενος "δίαυλος," δηλαδὴ δρόμος ἀπὸ τῆς ἀρχῆς μέχρι τοῦ τέλους τοῦ σταδίου καὶ πάλιν πρὸς τὰ ὀπίσω ἀπὸ τοῦ τέλους μέχρι τῆς ἀρχῆς. Ἔπειτα κατὰ τὴν ἀκόλουθον ὀλυμπιάδα, εἰς τὰ ἑπτακόσια εἴκοσι πρὸ Χριστοῦ, προσετέθη καὶ τρίτον εἶδος δρόμου, ὁ "δόλι-

The Olympian Games.

This festival began to attract much notice from the 14th Olympiad. Up to this Olympiad only one game was celebrated, the single course, but then for the first time the second contest was introduced, the double course, the so-called "diaulos," that is to say, a race from the beginning to the end of the stadium and again in the reverse direction from the finish to the starting-point. Then at the following Olympiad, 720 B.C., was added a third kind of race, the "dolichos," namely, a race from the beginning of the stadium to the end and the reverse, but many times repeated. It is worthy of note that this multiplication of contests coincides with the increase of fame and of reputation of the festival.

Κατὰ τὴν δεκάτην ὀγδόην ὀλυμπιάδα προσετέθησαν ἡ "πάλη" καὶ "τὸ πένταθλον," τὸ ὁποῖον περιελάμβανε συνάμα τοὺς ἑξῆς πέντε ἀγῶνας· "ἅλμα," ἤτοι πήδημα· "δίσκον," ἤτοι βολὴν διὰ στρογγύλου καὶ ὁμαλοῦ λίθου· "δρόμον," "πάλην," "ἀκόντιον." Ἕτερος νεωτερισμὸς ἐγένετο κατὰ τὴν εἰκοστὴν τρίτην ὀλυμπιάδα, τῷ ἑξακοσιοστῷ ὀγδοηκοστῷ ὀγδόῳ ἔτει πρὸ Χριστοῦ, εἰσαχθείσης τῆς "πυγμῆς" καὶ ἄλλος σπουδαιότερος κατὰ τὴν εἰκοστὴν πέμπτην, τῷ ἑξακοσιοστῷ ὀγδοηκοστῷ ἔτει πρὸ Χριστοῦ, εἰσαχθέντος τοῦ "ἅρματος ἵππων τελείων," δηλαδὴ τοῦ δρόμου δι' ἁμάξης

At the 18th Olympiad were added the "palē" (wrestling) and the "pentathlon," which included in one the following five contests: "halma," that is, jumping; "discos," that is, throwing by means of a round and smooth stone; "dromos" (running), "palē" (wrestling), "akontion" (spear-throwing). Another innovation took place at the 23d Olympiad, 688 B.C., the "pigmē" (boxing) being introduced, and another more important one at the 25th, 680 B.C., the "team of perfect horses" being introduced, that is to say, a race with a chariot drawn by four

perfect horses. This last contest contributed in the greatest degree to the adorning and making resplendent of the spectacle, for the richest of the Greeks descended to the contest, those able to keep the best of horses and to hire the most expert charioteers.

Κατὰ τὴν τριακοστὴν τρίτην ὀλυμπιάδα, τῷ ἑξακοσιοστῷ τεσσαρακοστῷ ὀγδόῳ ἔτει πρὸ Χριστοῦ, προσετέθησαν δύο ἔτι εἴδη ἀγωνισμάτων, "τὸ παγκράτιον" (ἤτοι ἀγὼν πυγμῆς καὶ πάλης συνάμα) καὶ ὁ "ἵππος κέλης," δηλαδὴ ἡ ἁπλῆ ἱπποδρομία. Ἐπὶ μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ μᾶλλον νέα προσετίθεντο ἀγωνίσματα, οἷον δρόμος ὁπλιτῶν ποικίλα παίδων ἀγωνίσματα, καὶ πώλων (ἤτοι νέων ἵππων) δρόμοι.

At the 33d Olympiad, in 648 B.C., two further kinds of contest were added, the "pancration" (namely a contest of boxing and wrestling combined) and the "hippos kelēs" (race-horse), that is to say, single-horse racing. More and more new contests were added, such as the race of soldiers in armor, various contests of boys, and races of colts (that is, of young horses).

Pronouns—ἀντωνυμίαι

The pronouns are divided into: 1, personal; 2, reflexive; 3, reciprocal; 4, possessive; 5, demonstrative; 6, interrogative; 7, relative; and 8, indefinite. Those of the first three of these divisions are called substantive pronouns, the others adjective pronouns.

1. Personal Pronouns—Προσωπικαὶ ἀντωνυμίαι

First Person

Singular		Plural
Nom.	ἐγώ, I	Nom.	ἡμεῖς, ἐμεῖς, we
Gen.	ἐμοῦ, μοῦ	Gen.	ἡμῶν, μᾶς

Acc.	αὐτό, τό	Acc.	αὐτά, τά

The dissyllabic forms of the first and second persons are seldom used in ordinary conversation, but belong rather to the literary language. In the oblique cases they invariably follow the verb which governs them. The monosyllabic forms are those most frequently heard. They usually precede the governing verb, except when this is in the positive form of the imperative; then they follow it; when the imperative is in the negative, however, they precede it. When following the imperative, they are enclitic, throwing their accent back on the final syllable of the verb, but in all other cases they retain their accent. In the compound tenses with θά, θέλω, or ἄς, they are placed between the participle and the verb; they occupy the same position also in relation to the negatives δέν and μή and to the conjunctions νά, etc. When following prepositions the monosyllabic forms preserve their accent, but after the prepositional adverbs (such as πλησίον and the like) they become enclitic, unless (as is usually the case, however) a special emphasis is laid upon them; thus: καθήσατε πλησίον μου, sit near me; ὅλοι ἐκτὸς σοῦ τὸ ἐπίστευσαν, all except thee believed it. When, however, there is a dissyllabic form (in all cases, therefore, except the second person singular) this is used after prepositions in place of the corresponding monosyllabic form. A frequent exception to this rule is πρὸς μέ, instead of πρὸς ἐμέ, although the latter is correct and is often heard.

2. Reflexive Pronouns—Αὐτοπαθεῖς ἀντωνυμίαι

First Person

Singular	Plural
Gen. ἐμαυτοῦ, -ῆς, of myself	Gen. ἡμῶν αὐτῶν, of ourselves
Dat. ἐμαυτῷ, -ῇ	Dat. ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς, -αῖς
Acc. ἐμαυτόν, -ήν	Acc. ἡμᾶς αὐτούς, -άς

SECOND PERSON

SINGULAR	PLURAL
Gen. σεαυτοῦ (σαυτοῦ), -ῆς, of thyself	Gen. ὑμῶν αὐτῶν, of yourselves
Dat. σεαυτῷ (σαυτῷ), -ῇ	Dat. ὑμῖν αὐτοῖς, -αῖς
Acc. σεαυτόν (σαυτόν), -ήν	Acc. ὑμᾶς αὐτούς, -άς

THIRD PERSON

SINGULAR	PLURAL
Gen. ἑαυτοῦ (αὐτοῦ), -ῆς, -οῦ, of him-, her-, itself	Gen. ἑαυτῶν (αὐτῶν), of themselves
Dat. ἑαυτῷ (αὐτῷ), -ῇ, -ῷ	Dat. ἑαυτοῖς (αὐτοῖς), -αῖς
Acc. ἑαυτόν (αὐτόν), -ήν, -ό	Acc. ἑαυτούς (αὐτούς), -άς, -ά

Note the rough breathing in both forms of the third person; in the other persons the breathing is smooth.

Instead of the forms above given the following are very commonly employed, especially in speaking:

	First Person	Second Person	Third Person
Gen. τοῦ ἑαυτοῦ / Acc. τὸν ἑαυτόν	μου, μας	σου, σας	του, της, των

3. RECIPROCAL PRONOUN—Ἀλληλοπαθῆς ἀντωνυμία

Gen. ἀλλήλων, -ων, -ων, one another
Dat. ἀλλήλοις, -αις, -οις
Acc. ἀλλήλους, -ας, ἄλληλα

Instead of these forms we very commonly have in the vernacular:

ὁ εἷς τὸν ἄλλον ἡ μία τὴν ἄλλην τὸ ἕν τὸ ἄλλο

4. Possessive Pronouns—Κτητικαὶ ἀντωνυμίαι

The possessive pronouns in ordinary use are simply the genitive form of the personal pronouns, namely, μου, my; σου, thy; του or αὐτοῦ, his; της or αὐτῆς, her; του or αὐτοῦ, its; μας or ἡμῶν, our; σας or ὑμῶν, your; των or αὐτῶν, their. These invariably follow the noun to which they refer, or its attributive adjective, if it have one. The monosyllabic forms are enclitic. Emphasis is expressed by ἰδικός, -ή, όν (own), followed by the pronoun, the two being placed between the article and the noun, thus: εἶναι τὸ ἰδικόν μου βιβλίον οὐχὶ δὲ τὸ ἰδικόν σας, it is my book, not yours. The same form is used when the possessive stands alone without a substantive; thus: τίνος εἶναι ὁ πῖλος οὗτος; ὁ ἰδικός μου, whose hat is that? mine.

There is another form of the possessive pronoun, employed in the literary language, to wit:

ἐμός, ἐμή, ἐμόν, my	ἡμέτερος, ἡμετέρα, ἡμέτερον, our σός, σή, σόν, thy	ὑμέτερος, ὑμετέρα, ὑμέτερον, your

These are declined regularly like adjectives of three terminations in -ος, -α or -η, -ον. They are preceded by the article and are placed before the noun to which they belong, agreeing with it in gender, number, and case. These pronouns are sometimes employed, instead of the enclitic forms with ἰδικός, to denote emphasis, or as a predicate without a noun; thus: ὁ πῖλος εἶναι ἐμός (or ἰδικός μου), the hat is mine (without the article); but: εἶναι ὁ ἐμός (or ὁ ἰδικός μου), it is mine (with the article).

A Letter of Counsel to Thomas Jefferson Smith.

Monticello,
February 2, 1825.

This letter will, to you, be as one from the dead.* The writer will be in the grave before you can weigh its counsels. Your affectionate and excellent father has requested that I would address to you something which might have a favorable influence on the course of life you have to run, and I too, as a namesake, feel an interest in that course. Few words will be necessary, with good dispositions on

* Ὁ Ἰεφφερσὼν ἦτο ὀγδοήκοντα δύο ἐτῶν ὅτ' ἔγραφε τὸ γράμμα τοῦτο.

* Jefferson was 82 years old when he wrote this letter.

περὶ τοῦ μέλλοντος ὑμῶν. Ὀλίγα θ' ἀρκέσωσι μόνον ἐὰν καὶ ὑμεῖς ἐπιδείξητε προθυμίαν καὶ θέλησιν. Λάτρευε τὸν Θεόν, τίμα καὶ ἀγάπα τοὺς γονεῖς σου, ἀγάπα τὸν πλησίον σου ὡς σεαυτόν, καὶ τὴν πατρίδα σου πλέον σαυτοῦ. Ἔσο δίκαιος, ἔσο εἰλικρινής, οὐδέποτε γόγγυζε κατὰ τῆς θείας προνοίας· οὕτω δὲ ἡ ζωὴ εἰς ἣν εἰσῆλθες ἔσται σοι ὡς προοίμιον ἀϊδίου καὶ ἀρρήτου εὐδαιμονίας. Ἐὰν δ' ἐπιτρέπηται τοῖς νεκροῖς τὸ μετέχειν τῶν ἐγκοσμίων, θὰ σᾶς παρακολουθήσω καθ' ὅλον ὑμῶν τὸν βίον.

Θωμᾶς Ἰεφφέρσών.

your part. Adore God. Reverence and cherish your parents. Love your neighbor as yourself, and your country more than yourself. Be just. Be true. Murmur not at the ways of Providence. So shall the life into which you have entered be the portal to one of eternal and ineffable bliss. And if to the dead it is permitted to care for the things of this world, every action of your life will be under my regard.

Grammar

5. Demonstrative Pronouns—Δεικτικαὶ ἀντωνυμίαι

These are: αὐτός, -ή -ό, this; οὗτος, αὕτη, τοῦτο, this (more emphatic than the preceding); and ἐκεῖνος, -η -ο, that.

Αὐτός, -ή, -ό is the same as the third personal pronoun. When used in connection with the first or second personal pronoun, it means self; thus: ἐγὼ αὐτός, I myself; ὑμεῖς αὐτοί, you yourselves; he himself means αὐτὸς ὁ ἴδιος. Ὁ ἴδιος may also be employed with the pronouns of the first and second persons in the same sense. Ὁ αὐτός, ἡ αὐτή, τὸ αὐτό means "the same." Αὐτὸς ὁ ἄνθρωπος or ὁ ἄνθρωπος αὐτός, this man; ὁ αὐτὸς ἄνθρωπος, the same man.

Οὗτος, αὕτη, τοῦτο. Distinguish carefully between this and the preceding; αὐτός -ή, -ό is accented on the final syllable and has the smooth breathing; οὗτος, αὕτη, τοῦτο is accented on the first syllable and the forms beginning with a vowel take the rough breathing. The two are practically the same in meaning, the second, however, being the more emphatic, and being also more commonly employed in the conversational language.

	Singular				Plural
Nom.	οὗτος	αὕτη	τοῦτο	Nom.	οὗτοι	αὗται	ταῦτα
Gen.	τούτου	ταύτης	τούτου	Gen.	τούτων	τούτων	τούτων
Dat.	τούτῳ	ταύτῃ	τούτῳ	Dat.	τούτοις	ταύταις	τούτοις
Acc.	τοῦτον	ταύτην	τοῦτο	Acc.	τούτους	ταύτας	ταῦτα

Ἐκεῖνος, ἐκείνη, ἐκεῖνο is regularly declined like an adjective of three terminations.

When a demonstrative pronoun is used with a substantive it may stand before or after it, but the article (which can never be omitted) immediately precedes the noun; thus: οὗτος ὁ ἄνθρωπος or ὁ ἄνθρωπος οὗτος, this man; αὐτὸ τὸ παιδίον or τὸ παιδίον αὐτό, this boy; ἐκείνη ἡ γυνή or ἡ γυνὴ ἐκείνη, that woman.

The particles μέν and δέ with the article are also used in a demonstrative sense: ὁ μέν—ὁ δέ, that one—this one, or the one—the other, the former—the latter.

The English "that," referring to a substantive just mentioned, is expressed in Greek by the article alone, thus: τὸ βιβλίον μου καὶ τὸ τῆς ἀδελφῆς μου, my book and that of my sister.

"It" or "they" used as a predicate of a demonstrative pronoun is not expressed in Greek: τοῦτο εἶναι, this is it; οὗτοι εἶναι, these are they.

6. Interrogative Pronouns—Ἐρωτηματικαὶ ἀντωνυμίαι

These are τίς, τί or ποῖος, ποία, ποῖον, who, what, which; πόσος, -η, -ον, how much or many, how great; πότερος, ποτέρα, πότερον, which of two. The latter belongs to the literary language, and even there is not uncommonly replaced by τίς or ποῖος τῶν δύο or ἐκ τῶν δύο.

All of the interrogative pronouns except τίς are regularly declined like adjectives of three terminations.

	Singular		Plural
Nom.	τίς	τί	τίνες	τίνα
Gen.	τίνος	τίνος	τίνων	τίνων
Dat.	τίνι	τίνι	τίσι(ν)	τίσι(ν)
Acc.	τίνα	τί	τίνας	τίνα

There is but one form for the masculine and feminine. Note particularly the accent; it is always on the first syllable, and remains acute (never grave) in the monosyllabic forms, even in the middle of a sentence. This distinguishes the interrogative from the indefinite pronoun of the same form, the latter being either enclitic or accented on the final syllable.

The interrogative pronouns must agree in gender and number with the substantive to which they refer;

thus: τίνες or ποῖοι εἶναι αὐτοὶ οἱ κύριοι; who are these gentlemen? τίνες or ποῖαι εἶναι αὐταὶ αἱ κυρίαι; who are these ladies? τίνα or ποῖα εἶναι αὐτὰ τὰ παιδία; who are these children? Τί is, however, often employed in conversation before a noun of any gender, in the sense of "what sort of a"; it is regarded as a contraction of τίνος εἴδους, of what sort. In the vernacular τί is employed in any gender and either number.

Τίνος εἶναι; means, whose is? to whom belongs?—τίνος εἶναι ὁ πῖλος οὗτος; whose is this hat?

7. Relative Pronouns—Ἀναφορικαὶ ἀντωνυμίαι

These are ὁ ὁποῖος, ἡ ὁποία, τὸ ὁποῖον, ὅς, ἥ, ὅ, and ὅστις, ἥτις, ὅ,τι, who, what, which.

Ὁ ὁποῖος is the form in common use; it is regularly declined like an adjective of three terminations, always with the article. The vernacular uses the indeclinable word ὁποῦ or ποῦ for all cases, genders, and numbers. The pronouns ὅς and ὅστις are used in the literary language, the first more often than the second.

	Singular				Plural
Nom.	ὅς	ἥ	ὅ		Nom.	οἵ	αἵ	ἅ
Gen.	οὗ	ἧς	οὗ		Gen.	ὧν	ὧν	ὧν
Dat.	ᾧ	ᾗ	ᾧ		Dat.	οἷς	αἷς	οἷς
Acc.	ὅν	ἥν	ὅ		Acc.	οὕς	ἅς	ἅ

In the ancient language the enclitic particle περ was sometimes joined to this pronoun, rendering it more emphatic, ὅσπερ, ἥπερ, ὅπερ, but only a few forms, practically only the neuters ὅπερ and ἅπερ are used at the present day.

Ὅστις is also defective in that only a few forms are now in use. It is compounded of ὅς and the indefinite pronoun τίς, τί. It is declined as follows, the rarely used forms being enclosed in brackets:

	Singular
Nom.	ὅστις	ἥτις	ὅ,τι
Gen.	οὑτινος	[ἧστινος]	οὑτινος
Dat.	[ᾧτινι]	[ᾗτινι]	[ᾧτινι]
Acc.	[ὅντινα]	[ἥντινα]	ὅ,τι

	Plural
Nom.	οἵτινες	αἵτινες	ἅτινα
Gen.	[ὧντινων]	[ὧντινων]	[ὧντινων]
Dat.	[οἷστισι(ν)]	[αἷστισι(ν)]	[οἷστισι(ν)]
Acc.	[οὕστινας]	[ἅστινας]	ἅτινα

The exception (in the genitive and dative) to the rule of accentuation that a circumflex cannot be placed over the penultimate syllable is only an apparent one, for the second part of the word is the enclitic indefinite pronoun (see below). The neuter singular has a comma (here called diastole, ἡ διαστολή) separating the two parts of the word so as to distinguish it from the conjunction ὅτι · or the two parts may be simply separated from each other without the diastole, thus: ὅ τι.

8. Indefinite Pronouns—Ἀόριστοι ἀντωνυμίαι

The indefinite pronoun τίς, τί, one, a certain, some, a few, is declined like the interrogative of the same form, but differs from it in accent.

	Singular		Plural
Nom.	τίς	τί	τινές	τινά
Gen.	τινός	τινός	τινῶν	τινῶν
Dat.	τινί	τινί	τισί(ν)	τισί(ν)
Acc.	τινά	τί	τινάς	τινά

These forms are all enclitic; thus: ἄνθρωπός τις ἐκάθητο ἔν τινι καφενείῳ τοῦ Λονδίνου, a man was sitting in a coffee-house in London; ἐὰν ἔλθῃ τις, εἰπέ τῳ, ὅτι δὲν δέχομαι ἐπισκέψεις σήμερον, if any one comes, say to him that I am not receiving visits to-day. If the word begins the sentence, it, of course, retains its accent, thus: τινὲς τῶν φίλων μου εἶναι ἐνταῦθα, some of my friends are here. The dissyllabic forms, however, as is the rule with all dissyllabic enclitics, retain their accent after a paroxytone word; thus the first of the above sentences might be written: ἄνθρωπός τις ἐκάθητο ἐν καφενείῳ τινὶ τοῦ Λονδίνου. Two instances of this exception to the rule of enclitics occur in the Reading Exercise in this lesson on page 258.

Ὅ, ἥ, τὸ τάδε, and ὁ, ἡ, τὸ δεῖνα, such a one, so and so; ὁ κύριος δεῖνα, Mr. So-and-so, Mr. What's-his-name. Τάδε is indeclinable, but δεῖνα is sometimes declined as follows (always with the article):

Singular	Plural
ὁ, ἡ, τὸ δεῖνα	οἱ, αἱ δεῖνες, τὰ δεῖνα
τοῦ, τῆς, τοῦ δεῖνος	τῶν δείνων
τῷ, τῇ, τῷ δεῖνι	(dative wanting)
τὸν, τὴν, τὸ δεῖνα	τοὺς, τὰς δεῖνας, τὰ δεῖνα

Κανείς, καμμία, κανέν is declined like εἷς, μία, ἕν. It means any one, anything; when standing alone in answer to a question, no one, none, nothing. In the literary language this word is generally replaced by τίς, τί (in the positive sense), or by οὐδείς, οὐδεμία, οὐδέν, or μηδείς, μηδεμία, μηδέν.

The neuter form is often replaced in the vernacular by τίποτε (τίποτα), thus: θέλετε τίποτε; τίποτε, do you wish anything? nothing. Σᾶς εὐχαριστῶ πολύ. — Τίποτε, I thank you very much.—Don't mention it.

"Something" is also frequently expressed—in simple, non-interrogative phrases—by κάτι or κάτι τι.

Other indefinite pronouns are: ἕκαστος, ἑκάστη, ἕκαστον (in the conversational language, καθείς, καθεμία, καθέν), each, every; ἑκάτερος, ἑκατέρα, ἑκάτερον, each of two; and in the popular speech: κάποιος, κάποια, κάποιο(ν), some one, something; κάμποσος, κάμποση, κάμποσο(ν), a large number, a good deal.

Τοιοῦτος, τοιαύτη, τοιοῦτο, such a one, and τοσοῦτος, τοσαύτη, τοσοῦτο, so much, so great a one, are declined like οὗτος, αὕτη, τοῦτο, but the initial τ of the second word disappears in the compound. Τέτοιος, τέτοια, τέτοιο(ν), which is regularly declined, is commonly employed in the vernacular instead of τοιοῦτος.

Ἡ Κυριακὴ Προσευχή

The Lord's Prayer

Πάτερ ἡμῶν ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, ἁγιασθήτω τὸ ὄνομά σου· ἐλθέτω ἡ βασιλεία σου· γενηθήτω τὸ θέλημά σου, ὡς ἐν οὐρανῷ, καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς· τὸν ἄρτον ἡμῶν τὸν ἐπιούσιον δὸς ἡμῖν σήμερον· καὶ ἄφες ἡμῖν τὰ ὀφειλήματα ἡμῶν, ὡς καὶ ἡμεῖς ἀφίεμεν τοῖς ὀφειλέταις ἡμῶν· καὶ μὴ εἰσενέγκῃς ἡμᾶς εἰς πειρασμόν, ἀλλὰ ῥῦσαι ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ. Ὅτι σοῦ ἐστιν ἡ βασιλεία, καὶ ἡ δύναμις, καὶ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας. Ἀμήν.

The preceding is the version of the Lord's Prayer which is recited in the public liturgies of the Church; the following is from a Modern Greek version of the New Testament, which is, however, not sanctioned by the Orthodox Greek clergy.

Πάτερ ἡμῶν ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, ἁγιασθήτω τὸ ὄνομά σου· ἐλθέτω ἡ βασιλεία σου· γενηθήτω τὸ θέλημά σου, ὡς ἐν οὐρανῷ, καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς· τὸν ἄρτον ἡμῶν τὸν ἐπιούσιον δὸς εἰς ἡμᾶς σήμερον· καὶ συγχώρησον εἰς ἡμᾶς τὰς ἁμαρτίας ἡμῶν, καθὼς καὶ ἡμεῖς συγχωροῦμεν εἰς τοὺς ἁμαρτάνοντας εἰς ἡμᾶς· καὶ μὴ φέρῃς ἡμᾶς εἰς πειρασμόν, ἀλλὰ ἐλευθέρωσον ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ· διότι σοῦ εἶναι ἡ βασιλεία καὶ ἡ δύναμις καὶ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας· Ἀμήν.

The Pronunciation of the Greek Language.*

Recently, before the Philological Society, a certain professor and able Homerist delivered a lecture on the pronunciation of Greek, dwelling especially on the famous passage of Thucydides concerning the plague. "The

"Ἡ περὶ τοῦ λοιμοῦ καὶ λιμοῦ ἱστορία παρὰ Θουκυδίδῃ, εἶπεν, ἀναιρεῖ ὅλως τὴν θεωρίαν ὅτι ἡ κατὰ τοὺς νεωτέρους Ἕλληνας ἐκφώνησις τῶν φωνηέντων ἦτο ἡ αὐτὴ καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἀρχαίοις χρόνοις. Ἀλλ' εἶναι παράδοξον ὅτι οἱ ὑπέρμαχοι καὶ τῆς ἑλληνικῆς καὶ τῆς ἀγγλικῆς θεωρίας ἐπικαλοῦνται ὑπὲρ ἑαυτῶν τὸ θουκυδίδειον χωρίον. Τί δὲ λέγει ὁ Θουκυδίδης; Κατὰ τοὺς χρόνους τοῦ λοιμοῦ ἐν Ἀθήναις, οἱ πρεσβύτεροι ἀνεμιμνήσκοντο ἔπους, ᾀδομένου ἐπὶ τῆς παιδικῆς αὐτῶν ἡλικίας. 'Εν δὲ τῷ κακῷ οἷα εἰκὸς ἀνεμνήσθησαν καὶ τοῦδε τοῦ ἔπους, φάσκοντες οἱ πρεσβύτεροι πάλαι ᾄδεσθαι· ἥξει Δωριακὸς πόλεμος καὶ λοιμὸς ἅμ' αὐτῷ. Ἐγένετο μὲν οὖν ἔρις τοῖς ἀνθρώποις μὴ λοιμὸν ὠνομάσθαι ἐν τῷ ἔπει ὑπὸ τῶν παλαιῶν, ἀλλὰ λιμόν· ἐνίκησε δὲ ἐπὶ τοῦ παρόντος εἰκότως λοιμὸν εἰρῆσθαι· οἱ γὰρ ἄνθρωποι πρὸς ἃ ἔπασχον τὴν μνήμην account in Thucydides concerning λοιμός and λιμός," he said, "overthrows entirely the theory that the pronunciation of the vowels according to the modern Greeks was the same as in ancient times. But it is singular that the partisans both of the Greek and of the English theory invoke in their own favor the Thucydidean extract. Now what does Thucydides say? At the time of the plague in Athens, the elders recalled a saying current in their youth: 'In their misery, as was natural, they remembered also this verse, the old men saying that it had been uttered long ago: A Dorian war shall come, and plague along with it. Now there was a dispute among the men that it was not called plague (λοιμός) in the verse by the ancients, but famine (λιμός); the opinion, however, at the present time ἐποιοῦντο· ἦν δέ γε οἶμαί ποτε ἄλλος πόλεμος καταλάβῃ Δωρικὸς τοῦδε ὕστερος καὶ ξυμβῇ γενέσθαι λιμόν, κατὰ τὸ εἰκὸς οὕτως ᾄσονται.' Ἐκ τοῦ χωρίου τούτου γίνεται ἐμφανές, ὅτι ἂν αἱ δύο αὗται λέξεις ἐξεφωνοῦντο κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ ἀπαραλλάκτως, δὲν ἦτο δυνατὸν νὰ ᾄδηται ὁ στίχος μετὰ τῆς μιᾶς μᾶλλον ἢ μετὰ τῆς ἄλλης λέξεως. Ἔπειτα ἐν τοῖς Ἔργοις καὶ Ἡμέραις τοῦ Ἡσιόδου ἀπαντᾷ στίχος, ἔνθα ὁ Ζεὺς λέγεται καταπέμψας 'λιμὸν καὶ λοιμόν'· γελοία δὲ θὰ ἦτο ἡ ὑπόθεσις ὅτι ἀμφότεραι αἱ λέξεις προεφέροντο leemon."

prevailed naturally that plague had been said; for the men made the account to agree with what they were suffering. But, I suppose, if another Dorian war ever come upon them after this, and a famine happen to exist, in all probability they will say the verse accordingly.' From this extract it is evident that if the two words were pronounced in the same way and exactly alike it was not possible for the line to be uttered with the one more than with the other word. Then in the 'Works and Days' of Hesiod there occurs a line where Jupiter is said to be sending down famine and plague; the supposition would be ridiculous that both the words were pronounced leemon."

present Greeks pronounce the ancient letters and diphthongs exactly in the same way as the ancient Attics; that some corruption has come into the pronunciation is not to be doubted, for, besides, never anywhere in any language has the pronunciation of the sounds been preserved in all respects unchanged and uncorrupted. From the above-cited passage it is at any rate to be inferred that the pronunciation of λοιμός according to the Erasmian system (that is to say, loimos) is unsupported, and that, as Oikonomos remarked sixty-five years and more ago, the λοιμός and λιμός of Thucydides argues more strongly in favor of our pronunciation than of the Erasmian. Certainly these two words were not exactly of the same sound; but they were decidedly very much alike in sound to each other; otherwise the disputants had not been able to change them one for the other, each understanding the one instead of the other. As the above-mentioned most learned Greek adds, the difference in these two words was a difference of letters, not of syllables; the character οι differed from ι in sound just as Υ from Ι; but if λοιμός were pronounced loimos, it would differ very greatly from λιμός, and then there would have arisen no doubt and no dispute concerning the meaning of the two words. Thus the adverse arguments of the professor fall of themselves.

Ὡς προσεπάγεται ὁ προμνημονευθεὶς σοφώτατος Ἕλλην, ἡ διαφορὰ τῶν δύο τούτων ὀνομάτων, λοιμὸς καὶ λιμός, ἦτο στοιχείων, οὐχὶ συλλαβῶν διαφορά· τὸ οι στοιχεῖον διέφερε τοῦ ι κατὰ τὴν ἐκφώνησιν ὅσον καὶ τὸ Υ τοῦ Ι· ἂν δὲ τὸ λοιμὸς προεφέρετο λοϊμός, θὰ διέφερε παραπολὺ τοῦ λιμός, καὶ τότε οὔτε ἀμφιβολία οὔτε ἔρις θὰ ἐγεννᾶτο περὶ τῆς σημασίας τῶν δύο λέξεων. Ὥστε αἱ ἐναντιολογίαι τοῦ καθηγητοῦ καταπίπτουσιν ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν.

Grammar

PREPOSITIONS—αἱ προθέσεις

There are eighteen prepositions, governing some one, some two, and some three cases; those governing more than one case have different meanings with the different cases. They usually govern the same case in the modern form of the language that they do in the ancient, although not invariably.

(A.) GOVERNING THE GENITIVE, ἀντί, ἀπό, ἐκ or ἐξ, πρό—

1. Ἀντί, instead of, for, against:

ἔρχομαι ἀντὶ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ μου, I come instead of my brother;
ἠκούσατε ὅτι ἐρρέθη ὀφθαλμὸν ἀντὶ ὀφθαλμοῦ καὶ ὀδόντα ἀντὶ ὀδόντος*, ye have heard that it hath been said, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth (Matt. v. 38);
ἠγόρασα τὸ βιβλίον ἀντὶ δώδεκα δραχμῶν, I bought the book for twelve drachmas;

* An archaic form of the aor. pass. of λέγω—ἐλέχθη is the form in common use, although the other is still encountered occasionally.

2. Ἀπό, from (of time or place), for, since:

ἔφυγεν ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεως, he fled from the city;
ἀπὸ καιροῦ εἰς καιρόν, from time to time;
κατοικῶ ἐνταῦθα ἀπὸ τριῶν ἑβδομάδων, I have lived here for three weeks.

ἀπό is followed in the vernacular, and not infrequently also in the cultivated language, by the accusative. It is also used in the vernacular to express a casual relation (instead of ἐκ, ἐξ), thus: ἀπέθανεν ἀπὸ πεῖναν, he died of starvation.

3. Ἐκ (ἐξ before a word with initial vowel), of, out of, from:

ἦλθον ἐκ (or ἐξῆλθον) τῆς οἰκίας, I came out of the house;
ἀπέθανεν ἐκ φθίσεως, he died of consumption;
γνωρίζω αὐτὸν ἐξ ὄψεως, I know him by sight.

4. Πρό, before (of time or place), ago:

ἦλθε πρὸ ἑνὸς ἔτους, he came a year ago;
πρὸ μεσημβρίας, before noon, antemeridian (π. μ., A. M.); τοῦτο συνέβη πρὸ τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν μου, this happened before my eyes.

The ο of πρό is not elided before a word beginning with a vowel; that of ἀπό is so elided.

(B.) Governing the Dative, ἐν, σύν—

5. Ἐν, in (of time or place):

τοῦτο συνέβη ἐν τῇ νεότητί μου, this happened in my youth;

εὑρίσκεται ἐν ἐσχάτῃ ἀνάγκῃ, he is in extreme want; κατοικεῖ ἐν Ἀθήναις, he lives in Athens.

ἐν is usually replaced by εἰς with the accusative.

6. Σύν, with:

ἀνεχώρησε σὺν γυναιξὶ καὶ τέκνοις, he went away with wife and children.

σύν is employed only very rarely and in the most elevated style, and then usually in such expressions as σὺν Θεῷ, with God's help. It is replaced generally by μετά with the genitive or (more commonly) by μέ with the accusative.

(C.) Governing the Accusative, ἀνά, εἰς, μέ—

7. Ἀνά, up, upon, throughout, by:

ἀνὰ πᾶσαν τὴν Εὐρώπην, throughout all Europe;

οἱ στρατιῶται ἐβάδιζον ἀνὰ δύο, the soldiers marched two by two (by twos);

ἀνὰ πᾶσαν ἡμέραν, each day, daily.

8. Εἰς, at, in, to, towards:

μένω εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν, I remain in the house;

πηγαίνω εἰς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, I go into the church;

μεταφράζω τὸ ἄρθρον εἰς τὴν Ἑλληνικήν, I am translating the article into Greek;

πηγαίνω εἰς τὸν θεῖόν μου, I am going to my uncle;

ἦτο εἰς τοῦ βιβλιοπώλου, he was at the bookseller's (shop); in this case εἰς appears to govern the genitive, but it really governs τὸ κατάστημα (the shop), understood.

9. Μέ, the vernacular form, in very common use, of μετά, with:

ὁ πατὴρ μὲ τὰ τέκνα του, the father with his children;

μὲ ὅλον τὸν πλοῦτόν σας δὲν εἶσθε εὐτυχής, with all your wealth you are not happy;

μὲ ὅλην τὴν κακοδιαθεσίαν του εἶναι εὐτυχής, with all (notwithstanding, or in spite of) his poor health he is happy.

One of the reasons why the British enjoy prestige and just renown abroad is the honor which not only the highest and most famous of its men, but also those who have served it well and have distinguished themselves, acquire in the nation. This takes place without inconstant bustle and reprehensible exaggeration, frustrating the very object, but in reasoned and attested examination of the facts.

The recently published biography of Professor J. S. Blackie furnishes a

This two-volume work does credit to the learned and eloquent lady who, immediately after the death of Blackie, undertook the task, and also excites the lively interest of us Greeks whose land and language the man of blessed memory warmly loved and served.

Rare is the success with which Madame Stoddard relates the history of the lifelong activity of a man so erudite, busy, and experienced as Blackie. and learned Greek professor.

Blackie was descended from an old family, the members of which had for a century and more followed hereditarily the profession of medicine. But his father was manager of a bank in Glasgow, where John was born in 1809. Educated in Aberdeen, he was advanced first to the law, but employment in a law office did not attract him. Therefore he went to Edinburgh in order that, when he had completed his studies, he might be ordained a clergyman. At that time there were teaching there the great hellenist Dunbar and the celebrated professor of philosophy Sir William Hamilton, whose friendly interest young Blackie succeeded in winning. But neither did a clerical career attract him; so, going to Bonn, he attended the university there, and Ἡ ἐν Γερμανίᾳ διατριβὴ αὐτοῦ ἤσκησεν ὁριστικὸν ἐπὶ τοῦ χαρακτῆρος καὶ τῶν φιλολογικῶν αὐτοῦ ἰδεῶν δρᾶσιν, ὡς καὶ αἱ σχέσεις αὐτοῦ αὗται. Τῷ 1839 διωρίσθη καθηγητὴς τῆς Λατινικῆς ἐν Ἀβερδήνῃ, τῷ δὲ 1852 ἐξελέγη καθηγητὴς τῆς ἑλληνικῆς ἐν Ἐδιμβούργῳ, τηρήσας τὴν ἕδραν ταύτην μέχρι τοῦ 1881, ὅτε ἀπεσύρθη ἐπὶ συντάξει. thence travelled through Germany and Italy, remaining for some time in Rome, where he contracted a firm intimacy with the renowned German archæologist Gerhard and with Bunsen. His sojourn in Germany exercised a definite influence upon his character and philological ideas, as did also these friendships. In 1839 he was appointed Professor of Latin in Aberdeen, and in 1852 he was chosen Professor of Greek in Edinburgh, retaining this chair until 1881 when he retired upon a pension. He died on the 2d of last March, in the 85th year of his age.

Τοῦ Βλάκη ἡ προσωπικότης ὑπῆρξε μία τῶν γνωστοτάτων καὶ προσφιλεστάτων καὶ ἐν Σκωτίᾳ, ὅπου ἐτήρησε ζῶσας πάσας τὰς ἀρχαίας τῆς χώρας παραδόσεις καὶ ὅπου ἀνεζωογόνησε τὴν σπουδὴν τῆς ἐγχωρίου Οὐαλικῆς γλώσσης, καὶ ἐν Ἀγ-

The personality of Blackie was one of the best known and best loved both in Scotland, where he kept alive all the ancient traditions of the country and where he revived the study of the native Celtic tongue, and in England, where he bound himself with strong ties to all the eminent men who flourished throughout his long life. He had a powerful assistant in his life work in his amiable and venerated wife, whom he married while still a young man, although after a long and persevering struggle against the opposition of her parents.

This is in brief the history of Blackie's life. But the influence of the man upon Greek philology and language especially interests us.

The archæological studies with Gerhard in Rome first aroused the special interest of the young student concerning Greek learning. Having met a young Greek there he beληνα, ἤρξατο ἀναγινώσκων μετ' αὐτοῦ τὸν Ὅμηρον καὶ τὸν Αἰσχύλον, καὶ τότε τὸ πρῶτον διέγνω, μετὰ χαρακτηριστικῆς ὀξυνοίας, τὸ ἐσφαλμένον τῆς Ἐρασμιανῆς προφορᾶς, καθ' ἣς διεξήγαγεν ἔκτοτε ἰσόβιον ἀλλὰ μάταιον ἀγῶνα. Ἐπιστέλλων δὲ πρὸς τὸν πατέρα του τὴν 28 Ἰανουαρίου 1831, ἔγραφε:

"Ἔχω κατὰ νοῦν σχέδιον ὅπως διεγείρω συζήτησιν περὶ τῆς ἑλληνικῆς προφορᾶς, καθόσον μοὶ φαίνεται σαφὲς ὅτι οἱ ἡμέτεροι καθηγηταὶ σφάλλουσι μὴ ἀποδεχόμενοι τὴν προφορὰν τῆς Νεοελληνικῆς. Αὕτη δὲν εἶναι νεκρὰ ἀλλὰ ζῶσα."

Ἀπὸ τῆς αὐτῆς ἐποχῆς χρονολογεῖται καὶ ἡ ἀπόφασίς του ὅπως κατάσχῃ τὴν ἕδραν τῆς ἑλληνικῆς. Ἐπανελθὼν δὲ εἰς Σκοτίαν, συνέτυχε διαπρύσιον θιασώτην τῆς ἑλληνικῆς φιλολογίας τὸν δόκτορα Ἄδαμς, ὅστις αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἐλάτρευε τοὺς ἕλληνας συγγραφεῖς gan to read with him Homer and Æschylus, and then first discerned with characteristic clearness of perception the error of the Erasmian pronunciation, against which from that time he carried on a lifelong but vain struggle. In a letter to his father dated January 28, 1831, he wrote:

"I have a project in my head to set on foot a controversy about the Greek pronunciation, as I think it quite plain that our professors are wrong in not adopting the pronunciation of modern Greek. This is not a dead but a living language."

From the same time also dates his determination to obtain the chair of Greek. Returning to Scotland, he met the ardent votary of Greek literature, Dr. Adams, who simply worshipped the Greek writers and enthusiastically learned by heart the odes καὶ ἐνθουσιωδῶς ἀπεστήθιζε τὰς ᾠδὰς τοῦ Πινδάρου εἰς οὐδὲν λογιζόμενος τὴν νεωτέραν φιλολογίαν, οὐδ' αὐτὸν τὸν Σακεσπῆρον, καὶ περιφρονῶν τὴν μέθοδον τῶν τότε ἐν Σκοτίᾳ καθηγητῶν. Ἀληθῶς δ' εἰπεῖν ὁ Ἄδαμς ἦν ὁ κράτιστος τῶν συγχρόνων του ἐν τῇ χώρᾳ ἐκείνῃ ἑλληνιστῶν, ὁ δὲ πρὸς τὰ ἑλληνικὰ γράμματα ὀργασμὸς τοῦ νέου Βλάκη κατέθελγεν αὐτόν.

of Pindar, deeming of no account the newer literature and even Shakespeare, and despising the system of the professors then in Scotland. In fact, however, Adams was the greatest of the Hellenists who were his contemporaries in that country, and the ardor of young Blackie for Greek letters charmed him.

Οὕτως ἐνθαρρυνθεὶς ἤρξατο ὁ Βλάκης μεταφράζων τὸν Αἰσχύλον, ἐκ δὲ τῶν σχετικῶν του μελετῶν προέκυψε σπουδαιοτάτη συμβολὴ εἰς τὴν μετρικὴν τῆς ἑλληνικῆς ποιήσεως, δημοσιευθεῖσα ἐν τῷ Foreign Quarterly Review τοῦ Ἰουλίου 1839 ὑπὸ τὸν τίτλον "Greek Rhymes and Metres," καὶ μετὰ ἓν ἀκριβῶς ἔτος ἑτέρα διατριβὴ περὶ Εὐριπίδου ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ περιοδικῷ. Ἀλλ' ἡ πολύμοχθος ἐργασία τῆς μεταφράσεως, ἥτις διήρκεσεν ἐπὶ δώδεκα ὅλα ἔτη, ἐκινδύ-

Thus encouraged, Blackie began to translate Æschylus, and from his comparative studies resulted a very important contribution on the metre of Greek poetry, published in the Foreign Quarterly Review for July, 1839, under the title "Greek Rhymes and Metres," and just a year later another essay on Euripides in the same periodical. But the laborious work of translation, which continued for twelve entire years, was in danger of becoming fruitνευε ν' ἀποβῇ ματαία, δι' ἀπορίαν τῆς πρὸς ἔκδοσιν δαπάνης. Τότε δὲ ἐξέλαμψεν ἡ ἀφοσίωσις καὶ αὐταπάρνησις τῆς συζύγου αὐτοῦ, ἥτις πωλήσασα τὴν οἰκοσκευὴν αὐτῆς, μετῴκησεν εἰς στενώτερον κατάλυμα ὅπως ἐκ τῆς οἰκονομίας ἐπαρκέσῃ εἰς τὰ τῆς ἐκτυπώσεως.

less through the lack of funds for the publication. Then shone forth the devotedness and self-abnegation of his wife, who, selling her household furniture, moved into smaller lodgings in order that from the saving there might remain enough for the printing.

Ἀλλὰ τὸ ἑπόμενον ἔτος ἐπεστέφοντο οἱ κόποι τοῦ Βλάκη καὶ ἡ ἐθελοθυσία τῆς εὐγενοῦς αὐτοῦ συμβίας· ἐπειδὴ διὰ τῆς ἐκλογῆς αὐτοῦ ὡς καθηγητοῦ τῆς ἑλληνικῆς ἐν Ἐδιμβούργῳ ἐπραγματοποιοῦτο τὸ ὄνειρον τῆς νεαρᾶς του ἡλικίας. Πλήρης δ' ἐνθουσιασμοῦ καὶ νεανικῆς ὅλως ὁρμῆς ἵδρυσε συγχρόνως καὶ τὴν ἑλληνικὴν ἑταιρίαν, εἰς ἣν συνεκέντρωσε τοὺς κρατίστους τῶν τότε ἑλληνιστῶν, καὶ ἧς σκοπὸς ἦν ἡ θεραπεία τῶν ἑλληνικῶν γραμμάτων.

But the following year the labors of Blackie and the self-sacrifice of his amiable consort were crowned with success, for through his election as Professor of Greek in Edinburgh the dream of his youth was realized. Filled with enthusiasm and youthful ardor, he founded at this time the Hellenic Society, into which he gathered the leading Hellenists of the time, and the object of which was the cultivation of Greek letters.

Ἡ δημοσίευσις αὐτῆς ἐπέσυρε μεγάλην προσοχήν, ἐπειδὴ οὐδεὶς εἶχε τολμήσει, ἐπὶ πολλὰ ἔτη, νὰ ἀμφισβητήσῃ τὸ ὀρθὸν τῆς ἐν τοῖς Βρεττανικοῖς σχολείοις συνήθους προφορᾶς· ἐκ τῶν πολλῶν δ' ἐπιστολῶν ἃς ἔλαβε τότε ὁ Βλάκη, παραθέτομεν τὰς ἑξῆς περικοπὰς ἐκ τῆς τοῦ Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, ἀκολούθως λόρδου Lytton, ἑνὸς τῶν διασημοτέρων συγγραφέων καὶ πολιτικῶν ἀνδρῶν τῆς ἐποχῆς ἐκείνης: "Τόσον μὲ κατέπεισεν ἡ ὑμετέρα διατριβὴ ὥστε ἄν ποτε τύχω τριμήνου θερινῆς εὐκαιρίας θὰ ἐπιδοθῶ εἰς τὴν σπουδὴν τῆς νεοελληνικῆς. Ἡ ἑλληνικὴ γλῶσσα δὲν εἶναι δυνατὸν ν' ἀποθάνῃ ποτέ. Λαὸς λαλήσας αὐτὴν ἅπαξ δὲν εἶναι δυνατόν ποτε νὰ τὴν ἀπαρνηθῇ."

Greek Literature, and at the same time he published his first short treatise on Greek pronunciation. The publication of this attracted great attention, for no one had dared for many years to dispute the correctness of the usual pronunciation in the British schools. Of many letters which Blackie then received we present the following extract from that of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, afterwards Lord Lytton, one of the most celebrated writers and politicians of the time: "If I ever get a good three months' summer holiday, I am sufficiently convinced by your treatise to resolve to give myself up to Romaic. Greek can never be a dead tongue; no people that once spoke it can give it up."

demanded realization—the alluring desire to see the Grecian land, to know the Greeks beloved by him, to hear their living language from the mouth of a Greek. On the 4th of May, 1853, he stepped upon the soil of Attica and was entertained by his fellow-countryman, George Finlay. The letters to his wife from Athens breathe out a pious ecstasy and an enthusiastic love for all that in the new Greeks reminded him of the old. Especially charmed him the appearance, the walk, and the brave and simple pose of the peasants, some of whom he likened to Agamemnon and Ajax. His very first care was to attend the lectures of the professors of the university, in order that, by listening, he might acquire a perfect use of the modern pronunciation (lit., of the according to us). But the

Upon returning to Athens and meeting Professors Kendrick and Arnold, he undertook with them a journey through Thermopylæ, Platæa, Orchomenus, Thebes, and Delphi as far as Parnassus. They travelled horse-back, and were obliged to provide themselves with provisions. The journey was very tiresome, until, arriving at the shady ravines of Parnassus, they came upon a large shepherds' gathering, where the shepherds welcomed them hospitably according to their ancient customs. Most vivid is the description of that scene, which so inspirited Blackie that he sang in a loud voice a war song of the Scottish Highlanders. Returning to Athens the middle of June, he found the heat unbearable, and after running out to Sounion and returning by way of Marathon and Pentelicus, he departed greatly exhausted. But up to his last breath he declared that that journey of his was the most memorable period of his life. From Vienna he wrote:

"Ἐπανακάμπτων εἰς τὰ ἴδια, δόξα τῷ Θεῷ, πεπλουτισμένος μὲ νέας ἰδέας καὶ νέα αἰσθήματα περὶ τοῦ ἑλληνικοῦ λαοῦ καὶ τῆς ἑλληνικῆς φύσεως, ἃς ποτε δὲν θὰ ἠδυνάμην νὰ πορισθῶ ἐκ τῶν βιβλίων. Ὀλίγη ζῶσα πεῖρα τοιαύτη εἶναι ἀξιωτέρα τῆς ἀναγνώσεως ὁλοκλήρου βιβλιοθήκης."

Πρὸς τελειοτέραν δὲ διδαχὴν τῆς ἑλληνικῆς, συμπαρέλαβε βοηθὸν τὸν ἀρχαῖον αὐτοῦ καθηγητήν, Ἰάκωβον Δοναλδσῶνα (νῦν πρύτανιν τοῦ Πανεπιστημίου τοῦ Ἁγίου Ἀνδρέα) ὅστις ἀπεδέξατο τελείως τὰς περὶ προφορᾶς ἀρχάς του. this journey was the conviction, from the study of the modern language, that the translation of the Iliad which he had already undertaken was very imperfect, and that he must go over the work again from the beginning. In order to a more complete instruction in Greek, he took along as assistant his old professor, James Donaldson (now Rector of the University of St. Andrew), who accepted entirely his authority in regard to the pronunciation. Both kept themselves informed concerning the literary movement in Greece, and of the political changes of that time, reading regularly the Athenian newspapers and reciting Klephtic ballads.

This impetuous love for Greece and Greek letters he communicated also to his pupils. And so, about 1856, was founded the "Blackie Brotherhood,"

"Ἀδελφότης τοῦ Βλάκη," ἧς σκοπὸς ἦν οἰκειοτέρα καὶ στενωτέρα τῶν προσφιλῶν ἐκείνων ἰδεῶν ἀνακίνησις.

Τῶν συνευτεύξεων τούτων ὡς καὶ τῆς ὅλης ἑλληνικῆς τοῦ Βλάκη διανοητικῆς ζωῆς προϊὸν ὑπῆρξαν τὰ μετ' ὀλίγον δημοσιευθέντα "Ἀισματα καὶ μῦθοι τῆς ἀρχαίας Ἑλλάδος." Μετ' οὐ πολὺ ἐξέδοτο φιλοσοφικὴν διατριβὴν περὶ τοῦ Καλοῦ κατὰ Πλάτωνα. Τὸ δ' ἀκόλουθον ἔτος ἐποιήσατο ἔναρξιν τῶν παραδόσεων αὐτοῦ διὰ διαλέξεως περὶ τῆς ὁμοιότητος τῶν Highlanders τῆς Σκωτίας καὶ τῶν ὀρεινῶν τῆς Ἑλλάδος. Εἰς τὰς περὶ Ἑλλάδος παντοίας γνώσεις του προσέτρεξε καὶ ὁ ἐπιφανὴς φυσιοδίφης Sir Roderick Murchison, συγγράφων περὶ τῆς γεωλογίας τῆς Ἑλλάδος.

the object of which was the more intimate and closer agitation of those beloved ideas.

A product of these reunions, as also of Blackie's whole Greek intellectual life, were the "Lays and Legends of Ancient Greece," published a little later. Not long after he published a philosophical treatise on Plato's Doctrine of the Beautiful. The following year he made a beginning of his course of lectures on the resemblance of the Highlanders of Scotland to the mountaineers of Greece. The celebrated naturalist, Sir Roderick Murchison, also had recourse to his varied knowledge of Greece when he was writing on the geology of Greece.

This period of the life of the ever-to-be-remembered Philhellene is memorable also because of two other incidents. About 1860 he met Gladstone for

At the same time the means of the frugal couple, enlarged through economy and industry, made possible the desire for a more comfortable establishment. Their home was adorned with Greek pictures and landscapes and with inscriptions from Homer and the other gods whom Blackie worshipped.

Grammar

Prepositional Adverbs

In addition to the true prepositions there are several adverbs which are used in the sense of prepositions, governing the genitive case. These are:

ἄνευ, without ἀναλόγως, in relation to ἀναμεταξύ, between, among ἀντικρύ, opposite ἀπέναντι, opposite ἄχρι(ς), as far as, until δίκην, as, like δίχα, δίχως, without ἐγγύς, near ἐκτός, outside of, except ἔναντι, opposite ἐναντίον, against ἕνεκα, ἕνεκεν, on account of ἐντός, within ἐνώπιον, in the presence of κατέναντι, opposite κατόπιν, behind κύκλῳ, round μακράν, far from μεταξύ, between, among μέχρι(ς), as far as, until παραπλεύρως, by, near πάρεξ, except πέραν, the other side of πέριξ, round πλήν, except πλησίον, near συνεπείᾳ, in consequence of χάριν, for the sake of χωρίς, without

Δίκην, ἕνεκα or ἕνεκεν, and χάριν may either follow or precede the substantive governed; the other prepositional adverbs and the prepositions themselves precede the substantive, almost without exception.

Ἅμα, as soon as, governs the dative.

And returning then to Edinburgh, he busied himself with popular teaching and promulgation of the Greek language. To this end he published a little later a collection of English-Greek dialogues, and following that an elementary Greek grammar. He continued his beloved theme, that on pronunciation, in correspondence with German and French men of letters.

In 1872, in the month of April, he delivered in the Institute a new lecture on the evolution of the modern (spoken) language —"History and Growth of Modern Greek." The extraordinary importance of that work aroused general attention to the subject; it is stated in the biography that our (compatriot) Mr. J. Gennadius, who was at that time secretary of the royal legation at Constantinople, obtained the permission of Blackie to translate the lecture, which was in fact published in Greek in the "Neologos." This long and persevering contest began to bear fruit. Not only the pupils of Blackie, but also many of his friends, men (of those) holding the first rank in letters, such as the famous poet Browning, were convinced, theoretically at least, as to the correct pronunciation. Queen Victoria, who resides each year in Scotland, requested that Blackie be presented to her. And after the presentation he was ordered to write his name in the Queen's album. When signing his name, Blackie also wrote some Greek verses.

Τῷ 1877 ἐξέδοτο τοὺς "Σοφοὺς τῆς Ἑλλάδος," σειρὰν δραματικῶν διαλόγων ἐπὶ φιλοσοφικῶν θεμάτων. Τὸ δ' ἐπιὸν ἔτος ἐπεχείρησεν ὁδοιπορίαν εἰς Αἴγυπτον, ὅπου ἐγένετο εὐφροσύνως δεκτὸς παρὰ τῶν ἡμετέρων.

In 1877 he published "The Wise Men of Greece," a collection of dramatic dialogues upon philosophical subjects. The following year he undertook a journey to Egypt, where he was pleasantly received by our (people).

But his advanced age and a life full of toil forced him to resign from the professorship in 1882, in the midst of manifestations of esteem and regret on the part of his students and colleagues.

Ὁ ἀκαταγώνιστος πρεσβύτης δὲν ἦτο δυνατὸν οὐδὲ οὕτως νὰ καθησυχάσῃ. Μεταβὰς μετ' ὀλίγον εἰς Ὀξωνίαν—τὸ κέντρον αὐτὸ τῆς Ἐρασμιανῆς αἱρέσεως—ἐποιήσατο διάλεξιν περὶ ἑλληνικῆς προφορᾶς. Ὁ ἄνθρωπος ἦν ὅλος μεστὸς ἑλληνικῆς παιδείας καὶ ἑλληνικοῦ πνεύματος, ἠλεκτρίζων καὶ ἐνθουσιάζων τοὺς πλησιάζοντας αὐτόν. Εἶχε διαδοθῇ ἡ φήμη αὐτοῦ καθ' ὅλην τὴν Ἑλληνικὴν Ἀνατολήν. The indomitable old man could not, however, so rest. Going a little later to Oxford, that centre of the Erasmian heresy, he delivered a lecture on Greek pronunciation. The man was completely filled with Greek learning and Greek spirit, electrifying and inspiring those who came near him. His fame had been spread abroad throughout all the Greek East. From Constantinople, Asia Minor, Egypt, and independent Greece he received congratulatory letters, honey, figs, and all sorts of sweets as a tribute of gratitude and friendship.

"Ἡ ζῶσα Ἑλληνικὴ" ἦτο τὸ προσφιλὲς θέμα τῶν συνδιαλέξεων, τῆς διδαχῆς, τῆς μελέτης αὐτοῦ. Κατὰ Μάρτιον τοῦ 1890 ἀνέγνωσεν ἐν τῇ Βασιλικῇ Ἑταιρίᾳ τοῦ Ἐδιμβούργου δύο διατριβάς, τὴν μὲν περὶ τῆς

In 1891 he undertook a new journey to the East. Landing at Nauplius in the middle of April, he visited Argos and Mycenæ, where a lunch was offered to the English travellers and where Blackie replied to the toast of Greece. Returning to Nauplius, he continued his voyage to Constantinople and then returned to Athens, where he was lodged at the English School. Much is related concerning his stay there and the joy with which he visited again the Acropolis and the other Τὸν Δεκέμβριον τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἔτους εὑρίσκομεν αὐτὸν καὶ πάλιν διαλεγόμενον ἐν Λονδίνῳ καὶ δημοσιεύοντα ἐν τῷ Nineteenth Century ἐπίκρισιν τῆς ὑπὸ τοῦ κ. Πολυλᾶ μεταφράσεως τοῦ Ἀμλέτου. Returning to Scotland, he writes thanking the friends who had sent him some numbers of the Acropolis. In December of this year we find him again lecturing in London, and publishing in the Nineteenth Century a review of the translation of "Hamlet" by Mr. Polylas. Such was his enthusiasm for Greek that even on his envelopes he had printed Greek texts, such as "Speaking the truth in charity," and "Good things are difficult." He was especially flattered when his students and friends wrote him in Greek; and the gifts which he distributed during the New Year holidays were accompanied by original Greek lines.

His excursions through Greece convinced him of the advantage which re-

sults from a local knowledge of the language and topography. He therefore asked, and after a four years' struggle succeeded, that a scholarship be founded for the sending of young students to travel, one each year, in Greece and the Levant.

Τὸν Ἀπρίλιον τοῦ 1892 ἀνέγνωσε καὶ αὖθις νέαν περὶ τῆς ἀναπτύξεως τῆς νεοελληνικῆς διατριβὴν ἐν τῇ Βασιλικῇ ἑταιρίᾳ τοῦ Ἐδιμβούργου· ἡ δὲ "ἑλληνικὴ ἑταιρία" ἣν πρὸ ἐτῶν εἶχεν ἱδρύσει καὶ ἥτις ηὔξανε καὶ ἐκραταιοῦτο, καθήδυνε τὰς ἡμέρας αὐτοῦ τὰς γεροντικὰς ἀποτείνουσα αὐτῷ ἐμμέτρους προσφωνήσεις.

In April, 1892, he read another new dissertation on the Development of Modern Greek, in the Royal Society of Edinburgh. The Greek Society, which he had founded years before and which was increasing and growing stronger, sweetened the days of his old age by sending him addresses in verse.

Ἡτοιμάζετο δὲ νῦν ἠρέμα διὰ τὴν μακρὰν ἐκείνην ὁδοιπορίαν, ἣν πάντες θὰ πορευθῶμεν, συντάσσων τὸν κατάλογον τῆς νεοελληνικῆς αὐτοῦ βιβλιοθήκης τὴν ὁποίαν ἐκληροδότησε τῷ ἐν Ἐδιμβούργῳ πανεπιστημίῳ. Ἐπεσκέφθη δὲ καὶ

He was now gently preparing himself for that long journey which we all are to travel, arranging the catalogue of his Modern Greek library, which he bequeathed to the University of Edinburgh. He also visited again for the last time Oxford and Cambridge, pleading in support of our pronunciation, but to ears of those not hearing. He persevered, however, arguing in Greek with the literary men who visited him and presenting to them the "Greek and English Dialogues" and the "Greek Primer."

Μετὰ πίστεως καὶ ἐπιμονῆς ἣν μόνον παρὰ Βρεττανοῖς εὑρίσκει τις τόσῳ σταθερὰν καὶ ἀκλόνητον, εἰργάσθη μέχρι τελευταίας αὐτοῦ πνοῆς ὑπὲρ ὑποθέσεως ἣν ἐλογίζετο ἱερὰν καὶ σωστικήν. Αὐταὶ αἱ τελευταῖαι του λέξεις ἃς ἀπέτεινε πρὸς τὴν βαρυαλγοῦσαν σύζυγον αὐτοῦ, ὅτε ἀνοίξας τοὺς ὀφθαλμούς, μετὰ μακρὸν κῶμα, ὀλίγον πρὶν ἢ ἐκπνεύσῃ, ἦσαν διὰ τελευταίαν φορὰν τὸ προσφιλὲς αὐτοῦ ρητόν: "Ἀληθεύων ἐν ἀγάπῃ."

With a faith and perseverance which one finds so firm and lasting only among the British, he labored up to his last breath in favor of a cause which he considered holy and salutary. His last words, which he addressed to his deeply afflicted wife, opening his eyes after a long unconsciousness, a little before he expired, were, for the last time, his beloved text: "Speaking the truth in charity."

Aids to the Further Study of Modern Greek

The number of works practically serviceable to the student of Modern Greek is somewhat limited. One of the best grammars published, unfortunately of use only to those who are familiar with German, is "Neugriechische Conversations-Grammatik," by K. Petraris, Heidelberg: Julius Groos, 1895. Another well-arranged work (also in German) is "Neugriechische Grammatik," by Antonios Jeannarakis, Hannover: Hahn'sche Buchhandlung, 1877. These two have been consulted in the preparation of various sections of this book. A good work in English is "A Handbook to Modern Greek," by Edgar Vincent and T. J. Dickson, London and New York: Macmillan & Co., 1887. A chrestomathy of great value, especially to those who desire to study the development of the modern language, is "Neohellenica," by Michael Constantinides, London and New York: Macmillan & Co., 1892. Another valuable work to the student of the history of Modern Greek is "The Modern Greek Language in its Relation to Ancient Greek," by E. M. Geldart, Oxford: The Clarendon Press, 1870. In this work the practical identity of the pronunciation of the Greeks of the present day with that of classical, or at least of New-Testament, times is well shown.

Of English-Modern Greek dictionaries, unqualifiedly the best is "A Concise Dictionary of the English and Modern Greek Languages, as Actually Written and Spoken," by A. N. Jannaris, New York: Harper & Brothers, 1895. The Modern Greek-English part is in preparation, but not yet published. There are several Modern Greek-English dictionaries, but none is entirely satisfactory; the most recent and perhaps the best is "A Dictionary of the Greek and English Languages," by John Pervanoglu, Athens: P. D. Sakellarios, 1894.

For constant practice in reading there is nothing better than a Greek newspaper. Such a one is published weekly in New York by Mr. Solon J. Vlasto. The title is Ἀτλαντίς. It contains articles on the current topics of the day, letters on political and literary subjects from Athens, and notices of lectures and discussions in this country and abroad on the subject of Modern Greek and of the reform in Greek pronunciation.

The vernacular form of Modern Greek is fully explained in the grammars of Petraris and Jeannarakis, above mentioned. An excellent book for practice in this form is "Echo der neugriechischen Umgangssprache," by A. N. Jannaris, Leipzig: Rud. Giegler. The definitions in the vocabulary are in German, consequently the work will be of little use to such as cannot read that language. An edition of the "Echo" with English vocabulary is, however, in course of preparation.

ΠΑΡΑΡΤΗΜΑ

The Irregular Verbs—Ἀνώμαλα ῥήματα

Verbs in μι

The verbs which belonged to this class in the ancient language are usually replaced in Modern Greek by the corresponding forms in ω· for example, ἵστημι (character a), στήνω or σταίνω· τίθημι (character ε), θέτω· δίδωμι (character ο), δίδω· δείκνυμι (character υ), δεικνύω. A few forms of a few of these verbs in μι are retained, or have been revived in the modern literary language, but they are not often employed. They differ in their conjugation, in the ancient language, from the verbs in ω only in the present, imperfect, and second aorist. These forms are as follows for the four classes of verbs in μι. They are here given in full, but very few of them are ever encountered in modern works.

ἐσόμεθα, ἔσεσθε, ἔσονται	θὰ ᾗμεθα, θὰ ᾖσθε, θὰ ᾖναι

All of the ancient forms above given are not used even in the most serious composition; those most frequently met with are the pres. ind. ἐστί and εἰσί, and the imperative ἔστω. The other forms should be made sufficiently familiar so that they can be recognized when encountered in reading. The dissyllabic forms in the pres. ind. (ancient) are enclitic.

In the modern form, the 3d pers. pres. ind. is often written εἶνε. The subjunctive is sometimes written εἶμαι, like the indicative, or ᾖμαι, without the iota subscriptum. The infinitive form εἶσθαι is used in the second form of the future (θέλω εἶσθαι). The imperfect is employed also in the sense of the perfect or aorist, or the latter is frequently expressed by the aorist of ὑπάρχω (ὑπῆρξα), to be, exist, or of γίνομαι (ἔγεινα), to become.

Irregular Verbs in έω and άω

Verbs in έω do not suffer a contraction to ώ if they would thereby become monosyllabic. Such are: δέω (vernacular δένω), to fasten; πλέω, to sail; πνέω, to breathe; ρέω, to flow; ξέω, to scrape; χέω (vernacular χύνω), to spill, shed; and their compounds.

The following contracted verbs (with their compounds) in έω retain the ε instead of η in the aorist and forms derived from it: ἀρκῶ, to suffice (ἀρκοῦμαι, to have enough); ἐμῶ, to vomit; ἠμπορῶ, to be able; καλῶ, to call; ξέω (not contracted in the present—see above), to scrape; τελῶ, to complete; φορῶ, to wear; also the compounds (where only these words are found) of αἰνῶ (ἐπαινῶ, to praise; συναινῶ, to agree, assert) and αἱρῶ (ἀφαιρῶ, to remove; ἀφαιροῦμαι, to forget one's self; διαιρῶ, to divide). The perfect passive participle, however, of these compounds takes η in the literary language, thus: ἀφῃρημένος, absent-minded.

The following contracted verbs in άω retain α instead of η in the aorist and derived tenses: All those in which the termination (άω) is immediately preceded by ε, ι, ο, or ρ; for example: μειδιῶ, to smile; δρῶ, to act; ἐπιδρῶ, to influence; θεῶμαι, to contemplate, view; ἐρῶμαι, to love. Also the following: γελῶ, to laugh, deceive; διψῶ, to thirst; θλῶ, to break; κρεμῶ, to hang; πεινῶ, to hunger; σπῶ, to break, burst (ancient, to draw—as a sword).

Irregular Augment

The following verbs with initial ε form the temporal augment with ει instead of η: ἐθίζω, to accustom, εἴθιζον· ἑλίσσω, to wind, εἵλισσον· ἑλκύω, to attract, εἵλκυον· ἕλκω, to draw, εἷλκον· ἕπομαι, to follow, εἱπόμην· ἐργάζομαι, to work, εἰργαζόμην· ἕρπω, to creep, εἷρπον· ἑστιῶ(άω), to regale, εἱστίων· ἔχω, to have, εἶχον.

The following usually take a double augment: βούλομαι, to wish, (ἐβουλόμην, or) ἠβουλόμην· δύναμαι, to be able, (ἐδυνάμην or) ἠδυνάμην· θέλω, to wish, ἤθελον.

Some verbs compounded with prepositions take the augment in the first syllable instead of between the preposition and the verb; among these are: ἀμφισβητῶ(έω), to dispute, ἠμφισβήτουν· ἀνάπτω, to light, ἤναπτον· ἀνέχομαι, to tolerate, ἠνεχόμην· ἐναντιοῦμαι, to oppose, ἠναντιούμην· καθίζω, to seat, ἐκάθιζον.

Ἑορτάζω, to celebrate, has ἑώρταζον instead of ἡόρταζον· ἐνοχλῶ(έω), to annoy, has ἠνώχλουν.

Εὑρίσκω, to find, takes no augment in the literary language: imp. εὕρισκον· aor. εὗρον. Εἰκάζω, to compare, also usually takes no augment: aor. εἴκασα, or sometimes ἤκασα.

In the vernacular the augment, when preserved, is usually placed before the preposition, as: περιπατῶ(έω), to promenade, ἐπεριπάτουν instead of περιεπάτουν—but it is more commonly omitted altogether.

The Verb in the Vernacular

In the ordinary conversational language the syllabic augment only is in use, and even this is generally omitted in words of more than two syllables, and sometimes in them as well. When used with verbs compounded with a preposition, it is usually placed before the latter, instead of between it and the verb. The temporal augment is found, however, in ἔχω, and verbs beginning with ο often change this to ω in the imperfect and aorist. The reduplication is not used.

Verbs ending in πτω are usually changed to φτω or βω, as κόφτω or κόβω instead of κόπτω, to cut. The termination σσω is changed to ζω, as τινάζω instead of τινάσσω, to shake. The aorist is, however, formed as in the literary language: ἔκοψα, (ἐ)τίναξα.

The final ν of the 1st pers. plur. is dropped, λύομε(ν), and to the ν of the 3d pers. plur. an ε is usually added, λύουν(ε). The imperfect ends in α instead of ον. In the 2d pers. plur. of the aorist the α of the termination is often dropped, thus, ζητῆστε instead of ἐζητήσατε, you have sought. In the passive the 2d pers. plur. ends in όμαστε instead of όμεθα. The imperfect takes όμουν instead of όμην, and the aorist termination is θηκα instead of θην. The following will illustrate these peculiarities.

ACTIVE

Ind. Pres. λύω, λύεις, λύει, λύομε (λύουμε), λύετε, λύουν(ε)
Imp. ἔλυα, ἔλυες, ἔλυε, ἐλύαμε, ἐλύατε, ἔλυαν (ἐλύανε)
Aor. ἔλυσα, ἔλυσες, ἔλυσε, ἐλύσαμε, ἐλύσατε, ἔλυσαν (ἐλύσανε)
Part. Pres. λύοντας (indeclinable)

PASSIVE

Ind. Pres. λύομαι, λύεσαι, λύεται, λυόμαστε, λύεσθε, λύονται

Imp. ἐλυόμουν(α), ἐλυόσουν(α), ἐλυότανε, ἐλυόμαστε, ἐλυόσαστε, ἐλυόνταν ε

Aor. ἐλύθηκα, ἐλύθηκες, ἐλύθηκε, ἐλυθήκαμε, ἐλυθήκατε, ἐλύθηκαν (ἐλυθήκανε)

Part. Perf. λυμένος, η, ο(ν), οι, αις, α

The vernacular makes frequent use of the perfect with ἔχω or εἶμαι instead of the aorist. It also avoids, as far as possible, the use of the passive voice.

In the case of verbs ending in άγω, έγω, and όγω the γ is generally omitted except in the 1st pers. sing., and in the plural the entire syllable beginning with this letter is dropped, thus: λέγω, λές, λέει, λέμε, λέτε, λέν(ε).

The preceding sketch of the peculiarities of the verb in the vernacular is necessarily very imperfect; the principal changes only are mentioned, those which the student will more frequently encounter and perhaps be puzzled by. One who wishes to make a thorough study of the vernacular will find it fully treated in the works of Petraris and Jeannarakis, and practically illustrated in the "Echo der neugriechischen Umgangssprache" (see p. 342).

Alphabetical List of the Irregular Verbs

The irregularities of the Greek verb are found chiefly in the aorist, the derived tenses (aor. fut. and perf. part.) being formed regularly from this. In the following table, therefore, the aorist alone is given as a rule, note being made of the other tenses only when their formation presents something peculiar. A list of verbs of which the second aorist is commonly employed has been given on p. 103. The verbs and special

Handwriting

The following are given as examples of Greek chirography. The first is the copper-plate style, reproduced from a school copy-book; the second and third are specimens of Greek as actually written. These are followed by a transcription in printed characters and a translation. In the copy-book exercise the proverbs are in the modern popular style, the maxims in the ancient; the others are in the modern literary style.

There are three contractions very commonly used in writing, as follows: ȣ (ου), ϛ (στ), and ϗ (καὶ).

Παροιμίαι.

Ὅλα ἔρχονται μὲ τὸν καιρό, ὅταν ξέρῃς νὰ προσμένῃς.
Μεγάλο καράβι μεγάλα κύματα.
Ὅσον 'δῇς μεγάλη ἀγάπη, δέξου καὶ μεγάλη ἔχθρα.
Τὸ θέρος ἔψαλλες, τὸν χειμῶνα χόρευε.
Ὁ καλὸς καραβοκύρης 'ς τὴ φουρτοῦνα φαίνεται.
Κάλλια ἕνας φρόνιμος ἐχθρὸς παρὰ ἕνας τρελλὸς φίλος.
Τὰ ἄσπρα καταιβάζουν τἄστρα. Καὶ τὰ βόλια κάνουν τὴς δουλειαίς. Ἄσκοπος ὁ νοῦς, διπλοῦς ὁ κόπος.

Ἀρχαῖα Γνωμικά:

Εἷς οἰωνὸς ἄριστος ἀμύνεσθαι περὶ πάτρης.
Γυναικὶ κόσμος οἱ τρόποι, οὐχὶ χρυσία.
Σοφία πλούτου κτῆμα τιμιώτερον. Σοφοῖς χρῶ.
Αἰσχρόν ἐστι προδοῦναι τοὺς εὐεργέτας.
Τὸ ψευδὲς κάλλος ὑπὸ τῶν δακρύων βασανίζεται.
Οἱ ῥήτορες γοητεύουσιν ἡμῶν τὰς ψυχάς.
Χρὴ τἀληθῆ λέγειν. Γνῶθι σαυτόν. Βίᾳ μηδὲν πρᾶττε.
Πλοῦτος τίμιος μέν, ἀλλὰ τύχης κτῆμα.

Proverbs

All things come with time, when you know how to wait. Great ship, great waves. Where you see great love, expect also great hatred. You sang in the summer, dance in the winter. The good captain is shown in the storm. Better a wise enemy than a foolish friend. Money brings down the stars. And the bullets do the work. Mind without aim, double trouble.

Ancient Maxims

A most excellent omen is to defend one's country. An ornament to a woman is character, not jewels. Wisdom is a more honorable possession than wealth. Make use of the wise. It is shameful to betray benefactors. False beauty is tested by the tears. The orators charm our souls. One must speak the truth. Know thyself. Do nothing by violence. Wealth is honorable indeed, but a thing of chance.

Greek chirography, like that of every other language, is more or less difficult for a stranger to read. Although the written letters resemble in general the printed, there are nevertheless certain differences, as appears from the preceding extract, which is taken from a copy-book published in Athens. In the ordinary writing these differences become more marked, and one needs considerable familiarity with the language in order to be able to read a letter easily. Besides, there are certain contracted characters in common use which do not resemble, or but little, the separated letters. These must be attentively studied and copied by the student after the above given models, so that they may be easily recognized when encountered.

New York,
July 20th, 1896.

Dear Friend:

Your last letter from Athens gave me great pleasure, since for a long time my dream has been (is) to visit that beautiful city, which, as you describe it to me with its ever-blue sky and with its white aspect, I picture to myself as a fancied spectacle pleasing to the eye.

I hope to visit it at the time of the next Olympian games, and on that account I have for some time been (am) busying myself with the study of Modern Greek, which I find very beautiful.

Awaiting another description from you,

I remain your friend,

Syllabic Division of Words

A word at the end of a line, in writing or print, may be divided between any two consecutive vowels or diphthongs, except that two vowels forming a diphthong cannot be separated; thus: ἀ-ό-ρι-στος, τοι-οῦ-τος, ὑ-γεί-α, ὑ-γι-ει-νός.

A single consonant, whether simple or compound, always belongs to the following syllable: ἀ-να-βαί-νω, λό-γος, ἀ-ξι-ό-τι-μος.

When two or more consonants come together the rule of division is that those and only those belong to the following syllable, and consequently must be brought forward to the new line, which together may begin a classical Greek word; thus: ἐ-κτύ-πη-σα, ἄν-θρω-πος, ἀν-ταλ-λάσ-σω.

Three consonants may begin a syllable if, in the classical language, the first with the second and the second with the third are found beginning words; thus: ἠ-λε-κτρί-ζω, αἰ-σχρός· there are no words beginning with κτρ or σχρ, but we find κτυπῶ and τρεῖς, and σχίζω and χρόνος.

Compound words are divided according to their component parts; thus: προσ-φέ-ρω, ὥσ-τε, δυσ-τυ-χής. If, however, the final vowel of the first component has been elided, the division is made as if the word were a simple one; thus: πα-ραγ-γέλ-λω, κα-τέρ-χο-μαι.
